MAILS TO INDIA.

Mails to India and China, via Marseilles, are despatched from London as follows, viz.:—Those for Bombay packets, on the evening of the 3rd and 18th of each month; and those for Calcutta packets (including mails for Ceylon, Madras, and China), on the evenings of the 10th and 26th of each month. When any of these dates falls on a Sunday, the mails are made up on the following evening.

Letters and Newspapers can be forwarded to any part of India, via Bombay and Marseilles, and in most cases will reach their destination some days sooner than if despatched by the following Calcutta mail. The Bombay mails via Southampton, however, are no longer available for the transmission of Letters or Newspapers to the Madras Presidency.

Mails for the Mediterranean and all parts of India and China, except the Bombay Presidency, are despatched via Southampton on the mornings of the 4th and 20th, or, when either of these dates falls on Sunday, upon the previous evening.

Mails for the Mediterranean, the Presidency of Bombay and Upper or North-West Provinces of Bengal and China, are despatched via Southampton, on the 12th and 27th of the month, except when these dates fall on Sunday, in which case they are forwarded on the previous evening.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

FRIDAY, June 5, 1863.

AMALGAMATION MEMORIALS.

We have received a copy of "All Memorials addressed to the Secretary of State for India complaining of grievances consequent upon the amalgamation measure," printed by order of the House of Commons; but we have not yet had time to digest this large mass of matter on a subject full of difficult complications. If the Royal Commissioners should come to erroneous and unjust conclusions, it will not be owing to any want of information on which to base a sound decision.

CALCUTTA MUNICIPAL BILL.

We noticed a few weeks back the strange apathy manifested by the citizens of Calcutta on the subject of the proposed Municipal Bill. Even the Legislative Council could not restrain an expression of surprise that neither suggestions nor objections should be offered by a single trader or citizen on the subject, though it was generally known that the Council would be thankful for such free and thorough examination of its scheme as would tend to its improvement. At last, however, the British Indian Association and a number of influential ratepayers have sent in to the Legislative Council a long list of objections, which will no doubt be conscientiously considered before the Bill is declared law.

THE BUDGET.

We have received by telegraph a brief and imperfect outline of Sir Charles Trevelyan's Budget, but before this paragraph is in the hands of our readers we hope the mail will bring us more complete and satisfactory details. The public may perhaps be a little disappointed, inasmuch as a larger surplus was anticipated, but we have really no good reason to grumble, considering the frightful, and apparently quite hopeless condition of the Indian Exchequer but a very few years ago, especially just after the great mutiny. We ought to be grateful to Wilson, Laing, and Trevelyan, for what they have done to increase the value of the most precious of our British possessions. The surplus for 1862-3 is £937,000. It is no great amount, to be sure, but then it is on the right side of the book. The calculated surplus for 1863-64 is £815,000, and not £1,500,000, as was sanguinely expected. The income-tax is not to be abolished, but it is to be reduced by 1 per cent. There is to be the same reduction in the duty on iron, and the grievous salt monopoly is to be wholly abandoned; and this is a great boon to millions of poor Hindoos. Sir Charles Trevelyan proposes to appropriate £5,000,000 to Public Works, and £500,000 to Public Education.

A NEW MERCANTILE COMPANY IN EGYPT.

A COMPANY has been formed at Alexandria for carrying on an extensive trade with Upper Egypt. It is under the immediate patronage of the Viceroy, who has promised to have a telegraph above Khartoum, and to extend the railway thither from Cairo. They will take advantage of the line of steamers on the Nile and the Red Sea. They seem to reckon confidently on a profit of 200 per cent. per annum. A correspondent of the Times says that the current rate of interest upon two trustworthy signatures at Kartoun is 10 per cent. a month, and that, nevertheless, the gains are so large that the traders can afford to pay it and realise a handsome profit besides on their adventures. The company will gradually extend its operations to Abyssinia. Their mercantile dealings are to be of a very miscellaneous character, including elephants' teeth, gums, bees-wax, ox hides, gold dust, coffee, cotton, and even live stock.

CHARTERED BANK OF INDIA, AUSTRALIA, AND CHINA, AND ITS BOMBAY AGENT.

A CASE of considerable interest and importance to mercantile interests was brought into the Court of Queen's Bench on Thursday, the 28th ultimo. It was against Mr. Rich, the Bombay agent and manager of the Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China. He was accused of negligence in the discharge of his duties in lending the company's money to those who, in the mercantile sense of the word, were not good men, and for discounting bills of exchange for native merchants without taking proper security, of the violation of the company's orders, and "incorrect and untrue statements respecting the business transacted by him on their account." The company claimed from him the sum of £20,000. Mr. Rich denied the truth of the charges against him, and complained that they were vague and indefinite. He, therefore, applied for the means of examining all the books of the bank, and copies of the correspondence that had been carried on between the company and his successor, Mr. Morrison, since he had left the bank. To this it was replied that it was "a fishing application," with a view to discover the names of the parties upon whose evidence the company relied, and in the hope of finding out something that might help the defendant to thwart or evade the proceedings of the prosecutors. After a very long argument, for and against, of the question of the right of "discovery" in such cases, the Lord Chief Justice delivered judgment against the application. We may as well quote the decision:—

"The principle was that the applicant must show that the document relates to the proof of his own case. The Court here could not collect that this was so, and rather collected the contrary. These documents were not like deeds, muniments of title or accounts, or the like, which showed the facts of the case on one side or the other, or on both; but were merely communications between the company and their agents abroad with a view to obtain information in support of their own case. Such communications could not be disclosed to the advantage and assistance of the opposite party. No authority went to that length, and this Court was not prepared to establish such a precedent. The object of the new procedure, no doubt, was to give the courts of common law the powers of courts of equity as to discovery; but there was no case to show that even in equity there could be such discovery. On the contrary, the current of authority at law and in equity appeared to be against the application. The communications were clearly of the most confidential character, and their disclosure ought not to be compelled, especially when it was not shown that they would tend to establish or elucidate the case of the applicant. The courts, in the exercise of their powers of discovery, were called upon to use a sound and wise discretion, and in the exercise of such a discretion could not enforce the disclosure of the documents sought for in the present case.

"Mr. Justice Wightman and Mr. Justice Blackburn concurred, the latter learned judge observing that the application really was to look at the rough notes and materials of the brief on the other side. It was true that in the case of Coleman v. Truman (in which he had been counsel) the Court of Exchequer had allowed inspection of letters which had passed between one of the parties, a merchant in London, and his agents in India; but there the documents were, in fact, the evidence of the contract between the parties, which was altogether a different case from the present.—Rule discharged."

AN ANGRY COMMERCIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

A VERY odd little war has been lately waged and terminated in the City of Palaces amongst certain merchants and traders in that locality. There has been no blood shed, but much ink shed. Paper-pellets of the brain, however, though they inflict no wound and leave no scar on the outer man, may cause serious injuries to the heart and mind, and even effect substantial damage upon commercial men whose good name is money. True words are things—and, indeed, so are false ones, for a time. The entire correspondence to which we are alluding, consisting of seventeen epistles, is published in extenso in one of the Calcutta papers received by the last mail. We should be sorry to trouble our readers with all these letters, but we think it as well to give some brief statement of the subject of them.

The Chamber of Commerce at Calcutta issues a Price Current under its own immediate authority. In one number of it appeared the following paragraph:—

"COLOURD YARNS.—The demand is active, and, accompanied by a speculative inquiry, prices have advanced; a parcel of favourite ticket changed hands yesterday at two rupees per pound."

This announcement is protested against as inaccurate by no less than seven leading mercantile firms in Calcutta—Messrs. Gladstone, Wyllie, and Co.; Lyall, Rennie, and Co.; Williamson (Brothers) and Co.; Gillanders and Co.; Jardine, Skinner, and Co.; Wattenbach, Heilgers, and Co.; and Potter and Co. These firms called on Mr. H. W. L. Wood, the Secretary to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, to state who sold the turkey-red yarn, and who bought it at the price of two rupees per pound. Mr. Wood replies that the paragraph was furnished by their usual reporter, and that the firm of Messrs. Grant, Smith, and Co. confirm the sale as a bonâ fide transaction. But the Committee of the Chamber of Commerce did not think themselves authorised to institute an inquiry as to the name of the buyer. In a subsequent number of the Price Current, however, it was admitted that though the sale in question was a bonâ fide transaction, "the price obtained appears to have been exceptionably high." Neither Mr. Wood's reply nor the admission in the Price Current was satisfactory to the protesting firms. On this Messrs. Grant, Smith, and Co., feeling their honour as merchants and gentlemen implicated in the discussion, come forward boldly in their own names, and offer to allow any third party, named by the President of the Chamber of Commerce, to examine their books, sales, account-sales, letters—in fact everything relating to the transaction, on the sole condition that on such third party confirming the accuracy of the sale, the protesting firms shall apologise for the injustice done to them. We must say that this appears on the face of it a very fair and manly proposal, and we are sorry that it is met somewhat evasively by the seven firms, who reply that they have nothing to do with any individual firm in Calcutta, but solely with the Chamber of Commerce and its Price Current, and they leave the Chamber of Commerce to meet as they please the offer of Messrs. Grant, Smith, and Co. And here the correspondence of seventeen letters of the Chamber of Commerce with the seven firms arrives at an abrupt and very unsatisfactory termination.

THE DEATH OF JOHN LILLEY AND THE CRAWLEY COURT-MARTIAL.

SOME one, signing himself "A Civilian," and whose real name is no doubt in the possession of the editor of the Times, has addressed a letter to that paper on the subject of the death of Sergeant-major Lilley, of the 6th Inniskilling Dragoons. We have transferred this letter to our own columns. It revives an old and painful story; but old and painful as it is, it is not yet time that it should be forgotten; and though, as a general rule, it is equally generous and judicious to let old and bitter personal disputes pass into oblivion—to let bygones be bygones—it is only after substantial justice has been afforded to every party specially and seriously aggrieved that the subject should be regarded as exclusively a thing of the past. Even death itself does not extinguish every claim upon the living, and the memory of such a brave and good soldier as the late John Lilley ought not to be darkened with a calumnious falsehood.

If we may give full credit to the statement of "A Civilian," or if we may trust to such corroborative evidence as now lies before us in a pamphlet entitled "Military Despotism, or the Inniskilling Dragoon,"* in which numerous official documents are quoted, it is quite clear that the existence of poor Lilley was at least shortened, if not destroyed, by the most cruel injustice, and that he was meanly persecuted even beyond the grave.

Paymaster Smales, about a year ago, was brought to a court-martial at Mhow for writing an insulting letter to Colonel Crawley, his commanding officer, in which he charged him with frequently signing his name on the adjutant's roll as present at musters, when, in reality, "he was almost systematically absent." Such a letter, so offensive in its tone, containing so grave an accusation, and addressed privately and personally to his commanding officer, was, of course, most irregular, and an act of inexcusable insubordination; and the writer paid the penalty of his rashness. He was cashiered by the sentence of the court-martial, the sentence being approved and confirmed by the Commander-in-Chief. But though Paymaster Smales was proved to have been guilty of a very grave military offence, no moral odium or degradation is attached to

it. His prosecutor is, in some respects, in a much worse position. It does not appear that Colonel Crawley availed himself of the opportunity to clear himself of the charge not only of neglect of military duty, but of the dishonourable and immoral act of deliberately signing a false statement, knowing it to be false. On the contrary, the three men whom it was known Paymaster Smales intended to call as his witnesses to prove the Colonel's absence at musters—one of them being poor John Lilley—were put under close arrest by the Colonel's orders merely for having read a copy of the Paymaster's defence, though it was admitted that the Colonel himself had also read it to his adjutant "in order to acquaint him with the points of evidence on which he should require him to speak before the Court." Sergeant-major Lilley's wife was dying of consumption, and yet a sentry was placed at the open door of the room within two feet of her bed. If the Sergeant-major had been a prisoner under the charge of murder he could not have been more severely dealt with. This cruel and atrociously unjust treatment so exaggerated the poor man's tendency to an apoplectic complaint that he died after a few days' illness, and his sick wife soon followed him. Colonel Crawley, to justify or palliate his own conduct, asserted that his adjutant had misunderstood his orders, which the adjutant positively denied. The Colonel also most ungenerously assured Sir Hugh Rose, the Commander-in-Chief, that the Sergeant-major's death was hastened by excess in drink. This accusation was founded on the simple fact that the Colonel had discovered somewhere a bill against the Sergeant-major for wine and brandy. It now appears that the wine and brandy were taken, not by himself, but by his dying wife to support and prolong her feeble existence, and that, too, under the immediate sanction of her medical attendant. The Commander-in-Chief, Sir Hugh Rose, apparently trusting too much to Colonel Crawley's private representations, went so far as to endorse the slander upon the poor man's memory. The matter will, perhaps, be brought before Parliament, for the British nation, when once roused by a case of extreme injustice of this nature, will never be satisfied until the whole affair is sifted to the bottom, and the blame is attributed to the right parties. We may have more to say upon this subject on a future occasion, but we must drop it for the present. We shall only add now that the late Sergeant Lilley had been always remarkably distinguished for sobriety and good conduct. He had been led to expect that he would be made a commissioned officer. His preceding commanding officer, Colonel Shute,* testified that "he was the most straightforward, truthful, and worthy man he ever knew, thoroughly sober and trustworthy, an excellent soldier, and respected by all who knew him;" and it is said that in a minute of H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-chief, which was read to the officers of the Inniskilling Dragoons at Mhow in February last, his Royal Highness "entirely exculpated the deceased Sergeant-major Lilley from accelerating his own death by excess in drink, and from any grounds of arrest whatever." The public will now need to be informed what notice has been taken of Colonel Crawley's extraordinary conduct, and will demand that something should be done for the old and helpless and sorrow-stricken surviving parents of the late Sergeant-major, whom his death has left in a state of destitution.

Since writing the above the Times has published the Memorandum issued from the Horse Guards on this affair; and we are glad to see that Colonel Crawley's conduct was duly censured as "exceedingly vindictive," as "very reprehensible," and that he would not have been allowed to remain in the regiment but for the "high opinion expressed of him by the Major-general," and that he will continue with the regiment "on trial only." It appears that Lilley and his two comrades were placed under arrest ostensibly on a charge of conspiracy, though with the real object of lessening the weight of their evidence by bringing them before the court-martial as prisoners, and the colonel pretended to be very indignant at their having got hold of an early copy of Paymaster Smales' defence, which the colonel himself had read quite as soon. No charge of conspiracy was formally preferred, and not a shadow of evidence was produced to that effect, and Sir Hugh Rose is indirectly censured in the Duke of Cambridge's remark that his Excellency "was misinformed of the circumstances of the case" (on which he commented so severely), "or he would not have dealt with the subject as he did, and not have attributed the death of Sergeant-Major Lilley to excess." It is pretty clear, we think, that the military authorities in India did poor Lilley a grave injustice, but his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge has shown himself to be the soldier's friend. Considering, however, that he has pronounced the Colonel devoid of "the tact to command the zealous co-operation of his officers,"—as on one occasion "exceedingly vindictive,"—and at others guilty of making use of "exceedingly injudicious language,"—and of having placed men under arrest for conspiracy, and yet brought neither charge nor evidence against them—we really think that it was not quite right or consistent in his Royal Highness to allow him to remain with the regiment he had so ill commanded, on the sole ground that another officer had expressed a high opinion of him.

We cannot say a word in justification of the conduct of Paymaster Smales, but we may fairly hint that if Colonel Crawley, in spite of his own gross misconduct, was allowed to remain with his regiment on trial only, that a similar indulgence might have been extended to Paymaster Smales; for Colonel Crawley was at least as much in fault as his subordinate, and was, indeed, the cause of the irregularities of his officers by his own want of tact and temper.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MAY 29.

THE OVERLAND ROUTE TO INDIA.

Mr. TORRENS asked the Secretary of State for India whether her Majesty's Government had taken into consideration the advantages that might result, politically and financially, from using the route through Egypt for our troops going to and returning from India; whether any correspondence on the subject had passed between the Secretary of State and any of the chief authorities at either of the Presidencies in India on the subject; and, if so, would there be any objection to lay the correspondence upon the table?

* Published by Chapman and Hall, Piccadilly.

Sir C. WOOD said the attention of the Government had been directed to the subject, and he had been in communication with the naval and military departments as to the best mode of carrying the measure into execution. Of course, there were several material considerations connected with the matter—financial considerations and others relating to the health of the troops on their passage—which required to be studied. A committee of the House had investigated the subject some time back, and had reported against it; but circumstances had since considerably changed, and he was inclined to think favourably of the possibility of carrying the suggestion into execution. The attention of the Home Government had been called to the subject by the Government of Bombay; but it would be of no use to lay the correspondence before the House, as in its present state it would only mislead. He hoped, however, to be able soon to come to a definite conclusion.

MILITARY OFFICERS IN CHINA.

Mr. LIDDELL asked the Under-Secretary of State for War whether British officers temporarily employed in commanding or drilling Chinese militia are still borne on the strength of their respective regiments; whether while so employed they received her Majesty's half-pay; and whether their promotion went on in the ordinary course.

The Marquis of HARTINGTON said that, as these officers were merely lent for the purpose of drilling militia, and were available for any duty which they might be called on to perform, they were still borne on the strength of their regiments. For the same reason, they still received regimental full pay, and not having been required to quit the British service, their promotion still went on. At the same time, he might mention that these officers were not allowed to proceed with the militia they were training beyond the thirty miles' radius.

STIPENDIARY NATIVE PRINCES IN INDIA.

Mr. ADAM asked the Secretary of State for India when a return which was moved for in May, 1861, relative to stipendiary native princes in India, would be laid upon the table, and what were the reasons which had caused delay in preparing a return, the importance of which was acknowledged by the India-office.

Sir C. WOOD said it was impossible to furnish the information from the home records, and he had sent out to India for the papers; but, though he had reminded the Indian Government once or twice of the requisition, they had not yet arrived. That was the only reason why they had not been laid on the table.

EAST INDIAN CIVIL FUND.

Mr. NEWDEGATE, who had given notice of a motion for papers on this subject, asked the Secretary for India whether he had any objection to produce them.

Sir C. WOOD said he was very willing to give all the papers necessary to show the whole of the case. The papers which the hon. gentleman had mentioned in his motion would not do this, and he would, therefore, add to them all that was necessary. With this addition, he should make no opposition to the motion.

LADY INGLIS'S PENSION.

Colonel DICKSON asked the Under-Secretary of State for War whether it was the intention of the Government to make any special grant to the widow of the late Sir John Inglis, K.C.B., under the peculiar circumstances of her melancholy bereavement.

The Marquis of HARTINGTON said that on the death of Sir J. Inglis Lady Inglis, by the direction of Sir G. Lewis, received the largest amount of pension which it was in the power of the Secretary of State to grant. Since it had been granted no official application had been received, which alone would enable the Secretary of State to apply to the Treasury, which had the sole power of granting a special pension.

THE CASE OF SERGEANT-MAJOR LILLEY.

Mr. FORTESCUE, who had a question on this subject on the paper, gave notice that on this day week he would bring before the House the whole circumstances connected with the death of Sergeant-Major Lilley.

Captain ARCHDALL subsequently asked whether a memorandum sent out to India by his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief relating to this case would be laid on the table.

The Marquis of HARTINGTON was understood to say that the memorandum was to be moved for by another hon. member, and he would make inquiries at the Horse Guards whether there would be any objection to lay it on the table.

CAPTAIN DEW AT THE SIEGE OF SHON-HING.

Colonel SYKES asked the Secretary to the Admiralty whether it was the intention of the Admiralty to submit the conduct of Captain Roderick Dew, of her Majesty's ship Encounter, to the judgment of a court-martial, for carrying on military operations in China beyond the thirty miles' radius from a treaty port, at the siege of Shon-hing, fifty miles from Ningpo, in which the life of Lieutenant Tinling, of her Majesty's ship Encounter, was sacrificed, in disobedience of the instructions conveyed in Earl Russell's despatch to Mr. Bruce, dated August 26, 1862.

Lord C. PAGET said that the Admiralty had received no official intelligence with regard to the death of Lieutenant Tinling, probably because the admiral was at Japan, the other side of the station. They had received, however, a private letter from Captain Dew, in which he stated that he and Lieutenant Tinling had accompanied the French officers to the siege of Shon-hing as amateurs. Of course the Admiralty could not say what they would do until they received official information on the subject.

INDIAN OFFICERS AT CANTERBURY.

Mr. M. MILNES asked the Secretary of State for India why any officer of the late India army now doing duty at the depot at Canterbury should not receive the pay due to his rank; and whether it was the intention of her Majesty's Government to make up to the widows and orphans of the Indian service the loss they had sustained by the late decision respecting Lord Clive's Bounties?

Sir C. WOOD said there was no officer at Canterbury who did not receive the full pay to which he was entitled. What his hon. friend probably referred to was the case of Indian officers who had exceeded their two-and-a-half years' furlough, and had not commenced performing depot duties. Those officers did not, during the interval, receive pay. With regard to the second question, the decision of the House of Lords on the subject was so recent that the Government had not yet had time to decide what course should be taken, but every necessary provision would be made.

THE DEATH OF JOHN LILLEY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "TIMES."

SIR,—Since I addressed you on this subject on the 9th inst. I have been furnished with a copy of the proceedings of the court-martial on Captain Smales, of the 6th Dragoons, printed at Poona in 1862. I have selected from it such facts as appear to me to bear most materially on the case of John Lilley, for the better information of the numerous members of Parliament who must take an interest in this deplorable tragedy.

In conducting his case against Captain Smales it became important to the prosecutor (Colonel Crawley) that he should prove his own presence at certain muster parades of the regiment which he commanded. Regimental Sergeant-major John Lilley, and Troop Sergeant-majors Wakefield and Duval, had been subpoenaed by the prisoner (Captain Smales) to prove that Colonel Crawley had not been present at those muster parades.

On the 5th day of the court-martial, the President observed that it had been brought to his notice that the proceedings of the three first days had been furnished by somebody to Sergeant-major John Lilley, and had been read at Lilley's quarters by other non-commissioned officers of the regiment. He stated that this was a highly improper and irregular act on the part of the said non-commissioned officers, and forbade anyone who attended the court—a public court—to make its proceedings public in future, "lest the minds of the witnesses, on one side or the other, should be biassed."

On the 15th day of the court-martial the prisoner brought to the notice of the Court that three of his witnesses—Lilley, Wakefield, and Duval—had been suddenly placed in close arrest, with sentries over them, by the prosecutor.

The Court explained that "they had no power to interfere in the matter;" and the witnesses for the defence remained in close arrest until one died, and until another was removed to hospital; when the third, after an imprisonment of forty days, was allowed to return to his duty.

When, on the twenty-seventh day of the court-martial, Regimental Sergeant-major John Lilley was brought up a prisoner and examined, he swore positively that the prosecutor had not been present at the muster-parades in question; and after detailing, in reply to questions put to him, numerous acts of severity to which he conceived himself to have been unjustly subjected by his colonel, he said, "The last act is the present time, by a sentry being placed at my bedroom door, where my sick wife is lying. The door is quite open, and the sentry is posted about two feet from my bed."

In cross-examination by the prosecutor, Lilley frankly admitted that he had read the prisoner's defence, a copy of it having been lent to him by Sergeant-major Wakefield; and that he was aware, when he read it, that the Court had prohibited the publication of its proceedings in the lines.

Sergeant-major Wakefield's evidence was precisely to the same effect as Lilley's. He also admitted that he had read some of the proceedings of the Court, which had been published in the newspapers, explaining at the same time that he had never received any orders not to read them, and that he was not aware that there was any reason why he should not do so.

Sergeant-major Duval's evidence was of a similar nature. The two latter witnesses were asked the following questions by the prisoner:—

1. How long have you been a prisoner, and what is your crime?
2. Have you a sentry over you, or are you under ordinary arrest?

The Court decided that such questions could not be put, and they therefore remained unanswered.

Colonel Crawley declined to cross-examine Duval, and made no attempt of any kind to show by evidence or by cross-examination that those three witnesses had been tampered with, or that there was anything in their previous characters or conduct which tended to impair the value of their testimony. Nevertheless, as soon as they had been examined, they were remanded by him into close confinement again.

The next witness called was the adjutant of the regiment, Lieutenant Fitsimons.

It transpired from the officer's evidence that Colonel Crawley, in spite of the extraordinary severity with which he was dealing with the prisoner's witnesses for having read the proceedings of the court-martial, had himself read these very proceedings to his own adjutant, "in order to acquaint him with the points of evidence on which he should require him to speak before the court."

On the 29th day of the court-martial, Colonel Crawley, in his reply, when he was no longer under the necessity of supporting his assertions by evidence, and when any statements which he chose to make must remain unanswered, explained the reason why he was treating Lilley, Wakefield, and Duval with such extraordinary and fatal severity. He is reported to have said—

"With regard to Regimental Sergeant-major Lilley and Troop Sergeant-majors Wakefield and Duval, I put their evidence out of court altogether, as they have all been guilty of a conspiracy against me and my authority, as already reported to the Court and his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, by whose orders the two latter still remain under arrest on this very charge of conspiracy against me and my authority."

And a little further on, Colonel Crawley is reported to have added, "as for the evidence of the Sergeant-major adduced by the prisoner, Regimental Sergeant-major Lilley and Sergeant-maors Wakefield and Duval are debarred from giving credible evidence from causes already assigned."

With respect to Mrs. Lilley, Colonel Crawley, in his reply, protested that nobody could have been more shocked than he was when he learnt the treatment to which the unhappy woman had been subjected, and cast the whole blame of the transaction on the adjutant of his regiment, whom he accused of having misunderstood his orders. But when Colonel Crawley had his adjutant under examination he carefully avoided any allusion to the subject.

The sensation caused by the death of John Lilley, followed, as it immediately was, by that of his unhappy widow, rendered it desirable that those to whose misconduct it was attributed should attempt to devise some other cause than that assigned by the surgeon for his decease. The surgeons had distinctly attributed the man's death to

"The excessive heat of the season, the peculiar and painful circumstances of his position, the serious illness of his wife, and the bilious and nervous derangement induced by a sedentary life attendant on close arrest."

While Colonel Crawley professed to attribute it to hard drinking alone, and communicated his views on the subject to Sir Hugh Rose, who at once animadverted in a general order on the purchase by Sergeant-major Lilley of a considerable quantity of spirits, wine, and ale during his incarceration, declaring his opinion that the purchase of such articles was "quite enough, in combination with Indian summer heat, to compromise the life of a man in exercise and in rude health." Colonel Crawley had arrived at the knowledge that these articles had been supplied to Lilley, from the circumstance of a bill for them having been sent in by a native dealer after the sergeant-major's death. There was no proof that they had been so sent in beyond the native's claim; there was no proof that Lilley had consumed any portion of them himself; no proof, indeed, that they had been consumed at all. On the other hand, Lilley, during his service of eighteen years, had borne an unblemished character for sobriety, which was confirmed by the position he held in the 6th Dragoons up to the day of his death. While in arrest he had been constantly under the eyes of a sentry, and had been visited daily by the orderly officer, the surgeon, and the assistant-surgeon, and the adjutant of his regiment; none of whom had, on any occasion, observed in him any signs of inebriety. When under examination before the court, Colonel Crawley had not ventured to put any question to him indicating that he doubted his sobriety; post mortem examination of the poor fellow's body showed no signs that his habits had been other than temperate. On this point the evidence is conclusive. It subsequently transpired that Lilley's wife, in the last stage of consumption, had, by medical prescription, been kept alive for many days by large doses of wine and spirits, and that the quantities thus prescribed to the woman by a Dr. Barnett tallied as nearly as possible with the quantity for which payment had been claimed by the Parsee wine and spirit dealer.

Nevertheless, Colonel Crawley did not hesitate, without inquiry and without the slightest ground for the charge, to forward to Sir Hugh Rose information which misled the Commander-in-chief into branding in a general order one of the most deserving soldiers in the service, almost before his body was cold, as a suicidal drunkard. Indeed it is impossible not to perceive that Sir Hugh Rose's remarks on the whole evidence given before the Mhow court-martial are not based on that evidence at all, but on private and ex parte information supplied to him by Colonel Crawley.

As soon as Colonel Crawley had obtained a verdict against Captain Smales, he at once dropped the charge of conspiracy against Wakefield and Duval, which had done its work by discrediting before the court-martial the witnesses whose testimony he most dreaded. Lilley had died on the 25th of May in close arrest. Wakefield was invalidated in consequence of his sufferings, and Duval was sent back to his duty.

The Adjutant of the 6th Dragoons, on finding himself severely censured in Sir Hugh Rose's general order for the manner in which Mr. Lilley had been treated, at once addressed an official letter to his Excellency through the Colonel of his regiment, protesting to him that he had received from Colonel Crawley explicit and positive orders to act as he had done, and naming witnesses who could prove that such had been the case. This letter, Major-General Farrell, commanding at Mhow, and Colonel Crawley, declared to be grossly insubordinate; and they directed Lieutenant Fitzsimons to withdraw it, forbidding him even to state in a subsequent letter, which they ordered him to write with that object, that he did so by their instruction. The letter in question was dated Mhow, November 3, 1862, and an inquiry into the circumstances under which it was withdrawn, and two other letters written by Lieutenant Fitzsimons, will be necessary in order that this miserable transaction may be fully developed.

All this, and far more than this, happened to one of the worthiest and best soldiers in the British army—in British India—but a year ago. If it had happened at Naples under the Sardinians—what political capital Sir George Bowyer and Lord Henry Lennox would already have made of it!

But John Lilley, his wife, and both his children, are dead. His parents are poor and obscure people; and if the outline of this terrible case, which I have here given, does not raise up for them assistance in some powerful quarter, they will of themselves be utterly powerless in bringing those by whom this foul deed has been done to justice. I will only add, that should any doubt be raised after what I have stated in my former letter as to the character which Lilley, Wakefield, and Duval bore in their regiment, there are reliable witnesses at hand to whom the Minister of War may easily refer. Colonel Shute, who commands the 4th Dragoon Guards, and Colonel Fitzwygram, who commands the 15th Hussars, are both in England. They can bear witness whether what I have written is true or false, and to them I fearlessly appeal.—I am, sir, your obedient servant,

A CIVILIAN.

May 27.

The following is the memorandum issued from the Horse Guards in this affair:—

"His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge has read, with deep regret, the proceedings of the court-martial on Mr. Smales, late Paymaster of the 6th Dragoons; and in reviewing the proceedings of the Court, and the subsequent remarks, his Royal Highness regrets that on some points he has been under the necessity of differing from officers high in command, on whose judgment on all other occasions heretofore his Royal Highness has had the greatest confidence. Nevertheless, for the interest of the service, his Royal Highness has but one course to pursue.

"His Royal Highness is of opinion that a great deal of irrelevant matter has been introduced into the proceedings of the Court: if charges had been simply framed for insubordination in writing such a letter to his commanding officer, the ends of justice would have been amply served.

"Without going into details, his Royal Highness takes the following view of the circumstances of the case:—

"The Inniskilling Dragoons, when in England, under Colonels White and Shute (two officers of whom his Royal Highness entertained the highest opinion), was one of the best—if not the best—cavalry regiment in the British service, whether as regards its esprit de corps and unanimity of its officers, or the drill and discipline of the men. When the regiment arrived in India, from the change occurring among some of the officers, it appears there was, on one or two occasions, some irregularity among a few of the officers when off duty, or at the mess, which his Royal Highness had occasion to visit with his displeasure; but yet, on the whole, the regiment maintained its good name for discipline and unanimity as before, as was shown by the confidential reports and other sources brought to the notice of the Field Marshal; and it was in this state the regiment was when Colonel Crawley assumed the command. His Royal Highness placed Colonel Crawley in command, knowing that he possessed a high character in the lower ranks of the service; but, however highly he may have been qualified as to drill and regimental duty, he certainly appears not to have possessed tact sufficient to command the zealous co-operation of his officers. He appears to have taken exception to certain practices in the regiment detrimental to its esprit de corps; and the language he made use of, on several occasions, his Royal Highness considers as exceedingly injudicious. Colonel Crawley's rejoinder to Mr. Smales's defence, his Royal Highness considers as exceedingly vindictive, and likely to raise a spirit of resistance among his officers. It is only from the high opinion expressed of Colonel Crawley by the Major-General under whose immediate command he is serving, that his Royal Highness allows Colonel Crawley to remain in the regiment, but it will be on trial only.

"His Royal Highness hopes that the report of the statements made by Colonel Crawley, on the occasion of his reading out the remarks of his Excellency Sir Hugh Rose, may prove to be incorrect, or it would add very much to his already very reprehensible conduct, and would necessitate his Royal Highness taking serious notice of the circumstances.

"As regards the confinement of the three non-commissioned officers, his Royal Highness views it with extreme displeasure. They were placed under arrest for conspiracy, when it appears there was no charge preferred against them, or the shadow of evidence produced to that effect; and it would also appear that his Excellency Sir Hugh Rose has been misinformed of the circumstances of the case, or he would not have dealt with the subject as he did, and would not have attributed the death of Regimental Sergeant-Major Lilley to excess."—Times, June 4.

PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.

The forty-fifth half-yearly general meeting of the proprietors in the above company was held on Tuesday, June 2, at their offices, Leadenhall-street, Mr. A. Anderson in the chair.

Mr. Howell, the secretary, read the report, an abstract of which has already appeared.

The Chairman in moving its adoption, said they were taking every measure in their power to render the company as efficient as possible. They had contracted for two extra vessels in addition to what they had referred to in their last report. The first was to replace the Colombo, which was lost, and the other to strengthen the Marseilles fleet. The economy of fuel was progressing satisfactorily, and he had no doubt but that it would fulfil the contract to the satisfaction of the Government. Touching the postal regulations, the Post-office authorities had come to the conclusion that the various postal services could only be efficiently conducted by a company having very extensive resources to fall back upon. Though they had accidents, they were in such a position that, in case of a break-down, they were able to place another vessel on in lieu of that which had been disabled. They had made a new proposal to the Government for doubling the line of postal communication between Australia and Point de Galle, and they had offered it at a very moderate rate, the result of which would be that these colonies would have a fortnightly mail regularly delivered, instead of a very uncertain monthly mail as at present. A deputation from the company had also waited on the Viceroy of Egypt, and had received the most friendly assurances from him. With regard to the dividend, he hoped they would be able, at the end of the year, to make from their supplemental sources the dividend equal to 10 per cent. The Chairman then formally moved the adoption of the report.

Mr. Hadow, the deputy-chairman, seconded the motion.

In answer to questions from Mr. Jones, Dr. Beattie, and other gentlemen,

The Chairman said that the greater part of the specie carried by the French steamers was for Egypt, and, being sent from the Continent, it could not be expected to be forwarded through England. The French steamers had a subsidy equal to five times that which they (the Peninsular and Oriental Company) received, and, therefore, could afford to carry passengers cheaper; but up to the present time they had not done so. With regard to the suggestion of carrying troops to India overland, they had seen it in the public prints, but beyond that they knew nothing about it. To meet the views of the War-office, they had given up £15,000 a-year of their contract, but to be relieved of the obligation of taking the Government officers for less than the company's fares. The Government had made no prohibition to officers going by their line, but they had limited the amount of allowance to the charge mail steamers made going round the Cape. The company had protested against receiving this diminished amount, and the question was still open. It had not at present done them any harm; but if the effect should be perceptible, they would then consider what course they would pursue with regard to it. Some question had been asked respecting their call for capital. It was true they were building eight new vessels to replace eight old ones; but to meet that expense they had a renewal fund of £340,000, they had in debentures £70,000, and the produce of the vessels sold besides; and those funds would meet all the outlay for building the new vessels without calling up any fresh capital. The shareholders had been told that the directors held nine-tenths of the shares in the company; but the fact was they held about one-ninth hundredth part; but the person who so wrote was little better than a lunatic. To show the inconsistency of his writing, he put the value of the shipping down at £1,000,000 more than it was worth. It had also been stated that their fares were exorbitant; but a statement he had prepared would contradict that assertion. The Chairman then read the following statement:—

"The ocean line of steam-packets with which the passenger rates of the Peninsular and Oriental Company are generally unfavourably contrasted is the Cunard line. Let us see how far facts support this unfavourable comparison. The distance from Liverpool to New York run by the Cunard steamers is 3,030 miles. The fare for a first-class passenger is £26, and neither wines nor spirits are included. The average cost of coals for the voyage is from 15s. to 15s. 6d. per ton, and the passenger traffic outwards and homewards is nearly spread over the year. The distance from Southampton to Alexandria is 2,951 miles. The first-class fare is £30, or 24d. per mile; wines and liquors, ad libitum, are included in this fare. The average cost of coals for each voyage is 37s. 6d.—more than double that of the Cunard Company, and the India passenger traffic is such that the Peninsular and Oriental Company's vessels have only a fair complement of passengers one way, travellers choosing one period of the year for proceeding to India, and another season of the year for coming from India. If we compare the rates of the Royal Mail Company to and from the West Indies, and even those of the far-famed Great Eastern, we obtain a similar result in favour of the Peninsular and Oriental Company. But, it may be said, 'Take your through fare to Calcutta.' I will do so. The distance is 7,708 miles, the fare £110, or 34d. per mile, or 14d. in excess of the Cunard rate. Here, again, wines and spirits are provided ad libitum, but when we come to compare the cost of navigation in the Indian seas with that on the North American line, we shall find the difference far exceeding the excess in the rate of passage-money. The average cost of coals for this through route is 46s. 6d., rather more than three times that on the North American line—the wages at least double, all victualling and naval stores much dearer, and, as I have already stated, nearly the whole expense of the voyage out and home is incurred for a complement of passengers one way. If we look to the cost of transmission of the mails, the Peninsular and Oriental comes out even more favourably. By the admirable report of the Postmaster-general the subsidy of the Peninsular and Oriental, including the Australian service, is 5s. 7d. per mile, while that of the Cunard Company is 9s. 2d., and the Royal Mail 8s. 5d. per mile." The Chairman concluded by giving a history of the rise and progress of the company from its starting, and referring with some asperity to attacks that had been made on the company by the Indian press.

A shareholder expressed himself dissatisfied with the report regarding the Colombo, and expressed his belief that it was lost through the gross negligence of Captain Farquhar.

Admiral Hall said the Board of Trade exonerated the Captain from blame, and the directors concurred in that report.

The report was unanimously adopted.

On the motion of the Chairman, a dividend of 3½ per cent. for the half year, and an additional 1½ per cent. was declared, free of income-tax.

A vote of thanks to the Chairman and directors closed the proceedings.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE STRANGERS' HOME FOR ASIATICS, &c.—On Monday the annual meeting of this valuable institution took place at Willis's-rooms, St.

James's; the Vice-President, Sir T. F. Buxton, Bart., in the chair (succeeded by the Right Hon. Sir John Lawrence). A short introductory address from the Chairman called upon Lieut. Col. Hughes, the hon. sec., to read the report. It appeared from the latter that although the institution owed a debt of £5,000 for its premises, it was otherwise progressing, and its receipts in the year left a balance over its expenses. The institution had proved itself not merely materially useful to poor Indians and others, but had been the means of propagating Christianity. A prayer meeting had been held in one of the rooms of the Home, at which four different Asiatic languages were employed. The missionary Mr. Salter mentioned having been personally instrumental in the conversion of a poor prodigal runaway Asiatic, of the condition in life of an apothecary in his own country, and a clever sort of person, who was found in England destitute, but reckless, and of a wilful and vicious disposition. Mr. Salter said he invited this man to his house, and after conversing with him in his own language (Oordec), he read to him the parable of the Prodigal Son; this laid the foundation for the young man's ultimate conversion to Christianity. Among the material uses of the Home, it was mentioned that in one case a native merchant from India had found assistance on bringing a Calcutta bill of exchange to the office. This bill he could not obtain cash for in this country without usurious interest, but the Secretary of the Home, by cashing the Bill, enabled the poor merchant to return to Calcutta. Many Lascar seamen had been sent home, shipwrecked natives of different countries sheltered, relieved, and assisted. The Home had been the means of re-mitting back to Persia, in the last year, two Nestorian priests discovered in this country; the sum of £36 had been collected for the priests (Yohanan and Yusef) and their destitute flock in Orumiah Persia. Capt. Wm. Eastwick, in moving that the report be adopted, reviewed its statements seriatim; he said that every year showed the great and increasing importance of an institution in which the poor and friendless natives of India and our colonies, strangers on the British shores, might find shelter from the streets, a home from destitution, and protection from ill-treatment. Six years ago there was no such philanthropic and benevolent movement in existence. After dwelling upon the religious uses of such an institution as the Asiatic Home, he expressed regret that it had not met with more liberal support. Drawing, as we did, much of our wealth from India, a country which contributed so largely to British power, it was surprising that so little return was made when this country was asked to befriend the homeless natives cast upon our shores. The Council of India, however, had countenanced, supported, and contributed to the Home, and many thousands of destitute Asiatics had been relieved at different times in the course of the few years in which the Home had carried on its Christian and benevolent operations. An anecdote was related as occurring to the speaker on first returning home from India in 1841. He said he was lodged at a large hotel in Liverpool, and was there attacked with an intermittent fever. He lay an invalid at the hotel for some time, but without experiencing any sympathy or hospitality on the part of the people connected with it. In fact, they wanted to get rid of him summarily, being afraid of infection. He could get little attendance and no nursing, when one day he heard an altercation in the passage of the hotel the subject of which was a poor Mahomedan "bearded like the pard" who sought admission to him. He (Captain Eastwick) on being entreated not to desert the poor fellow, gave him admission to his room, and, finding that he was destitute and willing to be employed, retained him in his service. "He slept" (said the speaker) at the foot of my bed for many weary days during my illness, and I owed my recovery probably to the tender nursing of the poor Mahomedan. Captain Eastwick observed, that he related the incident to show to what accidents the Asiatic stranger in this country might owe his precarious existence some years ago, but the establishment of the Asiatic Home had happily introduced great ameliorations in the condition of such homeless wanderers. The resolution was spoken to and supported by William Jenkins, Esq., interpreter to the New Zealand Government. The second resolution, expressing satisfaction at the progress which had attended the institution in its efforts for the welfare of the Asiatic and others when visiting the United Kingdom, was proposed by the Rev. T. Gaster, chaplain from India, in a brief speech, and the resolution was seconded by the Rev. E. Carr, who delivered a learned oration on the subject of religion in connection with philanthropy. The third resolution regretting the inadequacy of the resources of the Home, and appealing to its friends to use their best endeavours to make known its objects, was proposed by Captain A. Chapman, R.N., who spoke of the reciprocal advantages of the Asiatic Home and the Sailors' Home; and seconded by Sir Frederick Halliday. A vote of thank to the successive chairmen, Sir T. F. Buxton, and Sir John Lawrence, having been unanimously passed, the meeting separated.

PROPOSED HOME FOR THE WIVES, &c. OF ABSENT SEAMEN.—A meeting is to be held at the London Tavern to-day (Friday), at which Sir James Duke will preside, to promote a movement, suggested by Captain Henry Toynbee, for establishing a Home for the wives and families of absent seamen, and the formation of a fund to which every sailor may subscribe for his support in old age, and for assisting his widow and orphans in case of death. At Calcutta, the subject, which is of vital interest to the commerce of the empire, has already attracted earnest attention, and it is at the instance of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, who have addressed the Lord Mayor with regard to it, that the present meeting has been called.—Times.

DRAFTS ON INDIA.—The biddings for 40,00,000 rupees, or £400,000, in bills on India took place on Wednesday, the 3rd instant, at the Bank of England, and the following are the official particulars:—The proportions allotted where—to Calcutta 22,00,000 rupees; to Bombay 16,00,000 rupees; and to Madras, 2,00,000 rupees. The declared minimum price was, as before, 1s. 11½d. per rupee on Calcutta, and 1s. 11½d. on Bombay and Madras. The applications within the limits reached nearly 200 lacs. Tenders on Calcutta at 1s. 11½d. will receive about 29 per cent., on Bombay at 2s. about 34 per cent., on Madras at 1s. 11½d. about 36 per cent., and all above these prices in full.

THE EUROPEAN ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—A gratifying report has been issued by this society. It shows that the society was never in a more prosperous condition than it is at present. It appeared that, during the last year, the revenue, under the head of new shares alone, had reached £14,476, being an increase of £800 over 1861. The amount would have been, doubtless, much larger had it not been for the state of the cotton trade in Lancashire and Cheshire, where the company's operations are carried on to a large extent. With regard to the premium revenue of the company, it is stated that, in 1854, the revenue was £22,245, while in the year 1862 it stood at £133,163, or nearly six times the amount of the minimum revenue. In 1862 the directors acquired the business of the British Guarantee Association, and have already opened an office in Scotland, which is thriving. New shareholders (ten shillings paid up) are entitled to a 5 per cent. bonus, in addition to the 5 per cent. ordinarily paid by the "European."

EAST INDIA (HOME ACCOUNTS).—From a Parliamentary return, issued on Friday, May 29, it appears that the receipts of the Home Treasury of the Government of India, from the 1st of May, 1861, to the 30th April, 1862, amounted to £18,924,019, and the disbursements to £13,190,307, leaving a balance in Exchequer Bills of £398,500, and in cash £5,335,211—together, £5,733,711. The estimated receipts from the 1st of May, 1862, to the 30th of April, 1863, are put at £18,290,241, and the expenditure at £13,041,331, presenting a balance in Exchequer Bills of £909,000, and in cash £1,339,910—together, £5,248,910. The debts in England of the Government of India, on the 1st of May, 1863, are stated at £34,637,641, and the credits at £12,783,872, showing debts in excess to the extent of £21,853,769. The number of the establishments of the Secretary of State in Council in India on the 1st of May, 1863, was three hundred and thirty-six, and the salaries and allowances £115,802, and the allowances payable to clerks, messengers, charwomen, and labourers temporarily employed, £3,900. The amount of pensions granted or created in Great Britain between May 1, 1862, and April 30, 1863, was £3,394, in addition to which pensions have been granted to the extent of £570 to discharged soldiers who have held the rank of sergeant during the period prescribed by the regulations, in addition to their pensions from the military fund. Other allowances, &c., to the extent of some £1,400 or £1,500 have been granted to clerks, sergeants, and others.

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!!
C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times, C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Morlan, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches, with prices, free by post.

DENTAL SURGERY, 9, GROSVENOR-STREET.

MR. EPHRAIM MOSELY'S IMPROVEMENT in the CONSTRUCTION of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, and PALATES, on an INDIA-RUBBER BASE, are secured by Letters Patent, dated December, 1852, whereby the continual outlay of new teeth is avoided, alterations from the absorption of the gums, or any other cause, being easily remedied, and the first outlay no greater than for ordinary kinds. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted as under:—It consists of one continuous piece of Prepared India-rubber. The Artificial Teeth present an uniformly even surface to the action of the tongue, preventing lodgment of food and all secretions, so much complained of in the present system. No gold or any other metal being required, all springs, wires, and fastenings are wholly unnecessary; sharp edges are avoided, a greatly increased freedom of suction is supplied, a natural elasticity hitherto wholly unattainable, and a fit perfected with the most unerring accuracy, are secured; while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums. The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the prepared india-rubber; and, as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may be retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being at the same time provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The Company now stands, in point of revenue, seventh on the list of fire offices in the United Kingdom.
Insurances granted against fire at home, in the colonies, and most foreign countries.

FOREIGN RISKS.—The Directors, having devoted great attention to this branch of insurance, are enabled to offer unusual advantages as regards rates of premium and conditions, and a discount is allowed to merchants and others effecting their own and correspondents' insurances.

LIFE DEPARTMENT.

(REDUCED RATES FOR THE EAST INDIES AND CHINA.)

The Directors have recently adopted a new system of Rates for the East Indies and China, by which the insured, instead of being subjected to a heavy extra premium during the years of his residence within the Tropics, has the option of throwing the same over the whole currency of his insurance, by paying an unchanging rate, which it will be seen is very little higher than that charged for residence in Europe.

The following are specimens of the new Rates for civilians:

EAST INDIES AND CHINA.

ANNUAL PREMIUM (INCLUDING EXTRA) FOR THE INSURANCE OF £100.
(Payable during the entire currency of the Policy.)

Without Profts.	With Profts.	Age.	Without Profts.	With Profts.
18 ... 2 3 3	2 8 9	...	3 2 0	3 9 11
21 ... 2 5 11	2 11 11	...	3 7 9	3 16 6
24 ... 2 9 3	2 15 6	...	3 14 5	4 3 11
27 ... 2 12 11	2 19 9	...	4 1 11	4 12 5
30 ... 2 17 2	3 4 6	...	4 10 3	5 1 10

No extra charge for voyages.

Prospectuses and full tables of rates will be furnished on application.

AGENTS.—The Directors are prepared to receive applications for agencies from persons in a position to introduce fire or life business.

Quintessence of Jamaica Ginger and Camomile.

GINGER has long been deservedly known as an excellent domestic medicine, and, combined with camomile, it is the most efficient stomachic tonic known, for while the ginger relieves the stomach from distension and flatulency, arising from impaired digestion, the camomile strengthens the coats of the stomach, and by that means gives it a healthy and invigorating tone. So highly concentrated in this preparation, it is unimpaired by age or climate, and well adapted for exportation. In Gout, Spasms, Dysentery, Cholera, or those complaints incidental to tropical climates, it is invaluable, as in numerous cases a dose or two has checked and frequently cured most alarming attacks. No family should be without it. Sold in half-pints, quarter-pints, and one-eighth pints.

Agreeable Seidlitz Powder, in one bottle, protected by a core, with measure and spoon included. The advantage of this preparation is the perfect combination of the solid ingredients of the Seidlitz Spring in one compound powder.

It is very cooling and refreshing, well adapted for exportation, or travellers by land or sea.

Aromatic Tincture of Quinoline.—For the prevention of Fever, Intermittent or Remittent Ague, and other effects of Malaria.

No person exposed to the influence or predisposing cause of Fevers should be without it, for if taken in small doses daily the system will become so thoroughly impregnated with its principles as to be rendered proof against all attacks of Contagion or Malaria.—Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter-pints. The above articles prepared only by THOS. WILKINSON (late Wilkinson, Bridge, & Co.), 270, Regent-street, London, W.

DINNEFORD'S PURE FLUID MAGNE-

SIA has been, during twenty-five years, emphatically sanctioned by the Medical Profession, and universally accepted by the Public, as the Best Remedy for Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion, and as a Mild Aperient for delicate constitutions, more especially for Ladies and Children. When combined with the Acidulated Lemon Syrup, it forms an agreeable Effervescent Draught, in which its Aperient qualities are much increased. During Hot Seasons, and above all, in Hot Climates, the regular use of this simple and elegant remedy has been found highly beneficial.

It is prepared (in a state of perfect purity and of uniform strength) by DINNEFORD and Co., 172, New Bond-street, London; and sold by all respectable Chemists throughout the World.

CORALIUM SILEX, an entirely new substance for ARTIFICIAL TEETH, which will neither discolour nor decay, remaining firm in the mouth from one to a complete set, without springs, wires, or any visible attachment. PRITCHARD'S DANDELION, CAMO-

MILE, RHUBARB, and GINGER PILLS.—This peculiar preparation of Dandelion acts particularly on the liver, thus avoiding the use of mercurials, and will be found invaluable to parties suffering from a sluggish state of that organ, or who have resided in India or other hot climates; whilst the well known stomachic efficacy of camomile, rhubarb, and ginger, renders these pills the most happy combination possible; and as many are at a loss for a safe remedy they will find this medicine a great convenience, which may be resorted to by all persons at any age, under any circumstances, and without the least inconvenience.

Prepared by W. Pritchard, Apothecary, 65, Charing-cross, London, in bottles, 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. May be had of all Medicine Vendors.

EVERY MAN WHO IS "WIDE-AWAKE"

will instantly make use of PARR'S LIFE PILLS, when he finds that he ought to do something to improve the state of his health. Persons who are suffering from headache or indigestion, arising from constitutional inaction, biliary derangement, or over indulgence at the table, are particularly recommended to try Parr's Pills. They have never been known to fail in affording immediate relief. May be obtained of any medicine vendor, in boxes, 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d.; and in family packets, 11s. each.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.

EFFECTS OF COLD.—In many periods of the year almost every current of air is pregnant with sore throat, influenza, and a similar host of disorders. All may be readily subdued by rubbing Holloway's Ointment externally over the affected parts, which quickly penetrates any diseased or disordered part of the body; and whatever or wherever the seat or nature of the malady may be, searches out its cause, and safely effects the precise remedial action required, without weakening the system, or leaving behind any particle of the disease. Holloway's Pills greatly assist this curative action. The sick of all nations have voluntarily borne testimony to the extraordinary cures performed by these medicaments.

MAILS TO INDIA.

Mails to India and China, via Marseilles, are despatched from London as follows, viz.:—Those for Bombay packets, on the evening of the 3rd and 18th of each month; and those for Calcutta packets (including mails for Ceylon, Madras, and China), on the evenings of the 10th and 26th of each month. When any of these dates falls on a Sunday, the mails are made up on the following evening.

Letters and Newspapers can be forwarded to any part of India, viz. Bombay and Marseilles, and in most cases will reach their destination some days sooner than if despatched by the following Calcutta mail. The Bombay mails via Southampton, however, are no longer available for the transmission of Letters or Newspapers to the Madras Presidency.

Mails for the Mediterranean and all parts of India and China, except the Bombay Presidency, are despatched via Southampton on the mornings of the 4th and 20th, or, when either of these dates falls on Sunday, upon the previous evening.

Mails for the Mediterranean, the Presidency of Bombay, and Upper or North-West Provinces of Bengal and China, are despatched via Southampton, on the 12th and 27th of the month, except when these dates fall on Sunday, in which case they are forwarded on the previous evening.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE Indian press is still commenting on Sir Charles Trevelyan's Budget, and several of the London papers have taken up the same subject. Upon the whole, the general feeling, both in India and in England, is one of approbation and triumph. In our last number we gave the most complete report obtainable of Sir Charles Trevelyan's statement, for which we made room at considerable inconvenience, because we thought a paper like ours, devoted to Indian interests, ought, as a matter of historical record, to give a place to so important a document, however lengthy, and because many persons, not in our regular list of subscribers, might wish to obtain a copy of it, as it was not likely to be reprinted in extenso in other papers of a more general character, published in London.

We are sorry to hear that Lady Trevelyan, the clever and accomplished wife of our Indian Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the favourite sister of the world-renowned Lord Macaulay, has suffered so severely in health from an accident in the bath (perhaps a fall on the wet and slippery floor), that her medical advisers have recommended her to proceed immediately for change of climate to the Neilgherry Hills.

Mr. Peterson, a well-known Calcutta barrister, who has distinguished himself for years as a public speaker, as well as a powerful legal advocate, and as a most active, practical, independent, and useful member of the Legislative Council, was to be honoured by his fellow citizens, before his departure for England, by a public dinner. The day fixed upon for this token of respect to him has been altered, and the banquet was postponed to the 8th of May, the day of the departure of the mail for England.

Mr. Cowasjee Jehangjee Ready-money, as he is called, has sent the munificent donation of half a lac of rupees towards the building of an Eye Hospital at Bombay.

The Lieutenant-governor of Bengal has been a little perplexed and bothered by representations to the effect that his proposed Agricultural Exhibition will be offensive to Native prejudices, if specimens of domestic pigs are admitted. Both Mussulmans and Hindoos object to the unclean animal, which the Feringhee deems a delicacy. His Honor has consented to exclude the pigs.

The Railway from Calcutta to the terminal station at Mutlah was to be opened for public traffic a few days after the last mail left Calcutta—on the 15th of May, we believe.

The much respected Dr. Wilson, Residency surgeon, and obstetric professor at that truly noble institution, the Calcutta Medical College, of which the building is the most substantial of all public works in India, died early in April, on board a steamer, on his way to Ceylon, on leave of absence on medical certificate.

The sentence of death passed by the Sessions Judge of Sholapore on Madhowrao bin Rajaram, found guilty of waging war against the Queen, has been commuted by the High Court to transportation for life, and to forfeiture of all his property.

The steamer Bentinck, well-known as formerly one of the fleet of the Peninsular and Oriental Company, and now the property of the State, has been converted into a Floating Invalid Depot, chiefly for the benefit of sick officers and soldiers in Bengal. It is to be open to all other classes under certain regulations. A scale of charges for the accommodation of individuals of different ranks and circumstances has been published. This varies from eight rupees a day to warrant officers and their wives. Children under eighteen months of age are free. Civil servants of the first class are to pay twelve rupees a day, second class three, and third class one rupee eight annas. Surgeon-major E. Franklyn, of the 7th Dragoons, has been appointed surgeon to the Floating Hospital on the consolidated salary of Rs. 1,000 rupees per mensem.

The steamer Pearl, which had not been heard of for five months, at last made her appearance in the Colombo harbour on the 15th of May. She had run aground on the 9th of April somewhere near Hope Island, Cocanada.

An account of her narrow escape from total destruction will be found in another column.

The question of closing all places of business at one o'clock on Saturdays was brought before the Chamber of Commerce at its last general meeting, but the motion was lost by a majority of twenty-four votes to twenty-one.

It is expected, however, that most houses will follow the example of the banks, except on mail days, and close their establishments at one o'clock.

The Legislative Council at Calcutta has been very busy with the Municipal Act, which will probably come into operation on the 1st of July next. The Council have resolved, at Mr. Peterson's suggestion, to tax the town prettily heavily. Every citizen who exercises a trade or profession of any kind will have to pay an annual tax, ranging from 2s. to £10. Though Mr. Peterson has done this, it is creditable to Calcutta to say that he is still popular there, and his services in the Council are well appreciated by his fellow-citizens. The cost of keeping a city like Calcutta clean and well-drained, its surface being so low and level, and the habits of the natives, who do not care what amount of accumulated filth is festering at their doors, render it absolutely necessary for the public safety and convenience that the citizens of all ranks and castes should be compelled to contribute something to the municipal fund.

The Calcutta bank of the river Hooghly is at present a subject of earnest contention. The new Municipal Corporation will claim the stewardship of this large property as belonging to the town. At present it is in the hands of the State. The Calcutta Chamber of Commerce demands that it shall be vested in trustees, who may be empowered to raise money for improvement of the port as was done by the Mersey and Clyde River Trusts.

Sir Arthur Cotton, the Madras engineer, who has just returned to Europe, lectured just before he left India, in the Hall of the Chamber of Commerce in Calcutta, on works of irrigation and navigation. He is said to have been very bold and severe on the Government management of public works.

Mr. Gladstone's reduction of the tea duty has given great encouragement to the tea growers in India, and new tea companies are rising in all directions.

Dr. Beatson, Inspector General of the Hospitals in India, is now at Simla.

The Pioneer Regiment raised in the Punjab to serve in Ceylon has arrived at Calcutta, en route. The men have taken service for seven years, and have their families with them.

His Excellency Sir Charles MacCarthy, Governor of Ceylon, is said to have had a relapse of his former illness, and is delayed at Newara Ellia, where he had gone on his way to inspect the Badulla and Newara Ellia Road.

MADRAS IRRIGATION AND CANAL COMPANY.—

The annual general meeting was held yesterday at the London Tavern, Mr. J. Thomson in the chair. The report, which has already been published, was taken as read. In moving its adoption, the chairman expressed a wish that he could speak of more work completed and of more general advancement; but there had been a continued difficulty in procuring labour. The chairman went into a lengthened statement of what had been done in connection with the various works now in progress. The canal, he said, would be shortly completed, so far as to admit of water being conveyed along it to irrigate different districts. The Government had given them an assurance that under no circumstances should the land-tax be increased. The water-rate, therefore, in which they were deeply interested, remained as heretofore. The main aqueduct was close upon completion. They had one by one surmounted their difficulties, and they would continue to use their best exertions to promote irrigation, as one of the greatest blessings that had ever been conferred upon India. The report was unanimously adopted, and the proceedings were closed by a vote of thanks to the chairman.

MELANCHOLY OCCURRENCE.—We have to record the death of G. B. Carson, Esq., merchant, Colombo, from the effects of a shot from a loaded gun, used by the deceased himself, while labouring, it is supposed, under temporary insanity. This sad event took place at his residence, in Baillie-street, between five and six o'clock this morning. An inquest held over the remains has resulted in a verdict to the above effect.—Colombo Observer, May 16.

BENGAL.

FROM CALCUTTA TO LONDON AND ST. PETERSBURG BY THE CASPIAN.

There are some projects so daring in their conception and so novel in their character, that the first statement of their nature is apt to take away the breath and to lead those who are destitute of information, or imagination, or both, at once to pronounce their realisation impossible. And this is the case, although far more impossible feats may have already been brought to a successful conclusion. To the last generation, or to the Asiatic and savage who have not seen it, railway travelling at fifty miles an hour seemed the dream of a dangerous madman. That once accomplished, there were still educated men who doubted whether great bridges could be built in quicksand, or exposed to miniature icebergs, so as to span rivers a mile broad; and whether the locomotive could overcome the obstacles which nature offers to it by dragging heavy trains over them. Yet within little more than a decade the Menai Bridge, which seems to hang in air, the St. Lawrence and Soane bridges and the Bhore Ghant works, prove that to engineering science few things are impossible. The underground railways and pneumatic despatch tubes of London should prepare us for their extremes in great balloon voyages. While the chief stimulant of science is curiosity, its last lesson is always admirari. If the middle of the nineteenth century has produced such marvels, what may we not expect of our descendants before its close?

We would thus deprecate the wise doubts and protestations with which some are sure to receive our announcement that there is a serious project for a railway from Calcutta to London and St. Petersburg through Central Asia with the sole break of the Caspian. The Northern part of Western Turkistan belongs to Russia already. Her system of railways from St. Petersburg and Moscow will soon reach as far as Saratov on the Volga which falls into the Caspian at Astrakhan. The European system has reached as far as Lemberg in Galicia, near the frontier of Russia, and is to be continued thence by Kiev to Astrakhan. At present Russian steamers ply on the Caspian, across its narrowest part from Astrakhan to Novo Petrovskoe. Russia, which already monopolises the trade of Western Turkistan from Cabul and Herat to Bokhara and Khiva, is determined to have railway communication in Central Asia. There, in spite of great cold succeeded by burning heat, there are several lines of Russian wells, past which the great caravans journey every year with their precious commodities to the Caspian, or up between the Caspian and the Sea of Aral to the Orenburg Fair. The whole country is now familiar to Russia. She values its trade; and she is the best judge of its value. She is anxious to connect her territories with those of British India, and the sole question is whether she or England is to do the work and reap the results. To us far more than to Russia the question is one of vital importance, and English engineers are at this moment seriously studying the whole question, convinced of the practicability of such a railway and of its advantages over the often discussed line by the Euphrates valley.

Taking Stanford's or any other good map of Asia, it will be found that a line drawn from Calcutta, as the crow flies, to London will take as nearly as possible the following route: from Calcutta by Raneegunge to the Ganges at Buxar; thence through Oude and Rohilcund to Umballa; thence by Lahore and Peshawur through the Khyber Pass to Jellalabad and Cabul; thence through the Hindoo Koosh and along the valley of the Oxus which rises there past Balkh to Khiva, leaving Bokhara on the right, and finally to Novo Petrovskoe on the great peninsula which juts into the Caspian opposite Astrakhan. There steamers cross, and from Astrakhan the Russian railway system contemplates lines to Saratov on the Volga for Moscow and St. Petersburg, and to Lemberg, whence the line runs at present to Ostend. A railway thus laid down would strike the chief cities and centres of trade and pilgrimage, and take the traveller in eight days from Calcutta to London. To go more into detail:—Starting from Calcutta the railway is open to Raneegunge, and thence a coal line is nearly finished to the Burraker river. The continuation of that direct to Buxar, so as to avoid the bends of the Ganges by the present East Indian line, has often been urged as saving 80 miles, and is sure to be carried out for its local advantages. From Buxar, where the Ganges can be most easily bridged, the Indian Branch Railway Company propose to lay down light lines direct to Umballa, saving nearly 150 miles on the present East Indian line, which will never suffice, in any case, for the enormous through traffic. At Umballa there will be in three years the line to Lahore. Starting there we have the great road to Peshawur on which a million sterling has been wastefully spent. And this is the first difficulty—can a railway be laid down on that great road with its curves and inclines? Passing through the Attock Tunnel at Peshawur, we enter the Khyber Pass, which no engineer is afraid of, though at Jellalabad, and go on to Cabul. To our left lie Ghuznee, Candahar, and Herat. We pass over the only engineering difficulty which is really calculated to startle us by the doubt that even money and science may not overcome it—the Hindoo Koosh. Can a railway be taken through the Hajeegur Pass which opens out on Bamian? This is the caravan route, and so it may follow that route to Khulm and Balkh, and then strike on the easy valley of the Oxus. Around it are the important Uzbek towns of Shibbergan, Maimunna, and Andhko, all to the north of Herat. Here too comes the traffic from Yarkand and Bokhara. More to the left or west are the important towns of Meshed and Nishapur on the way to Teheran. The first with 60,000 inhabitants is visited annually by 50,000 pilgrims, and is the entrepot of the Persian, Tartar and Afghan States. Passing on we come to Merve and finally Khiva, when we leave the Oxus valley and get into Russian territory, finally striking on the Caspian where a steamer receives us.

We are far from shutting our eyes to the difficulties of climate and race which may be brought against the scheme. The Oxus valley is subject to the extremes of heat and cold, and we leave the territories of our ally, Dost Mahomed, at Balkh. It may be questioned if he, and still less his successors, will allow a railway even for any amount of black-mail; and beyond Balkh, Khiva is the most barbarous of all Asiatic States. But Russia is said to be in earnest on the matter, and railway communication of some kind between the Caspian and the Indus is only a question of time. Moreover the obstacles are not much greater than those which offer themselves to the rival line from Kurrachee to Belgrade, which is supported by Sir M. Stephenson and Mr. W. P. Andrew. The climate of Beloochistan may fairly be set against that of the Oxus and Hindoo Koosh, and as to political difficulties, the Belooch chiefs will not let us make even a line of telegraph. Russian aid is more valuable than Turkish, and the Caspian route is two days shorter. At any rate, whatever may be the balance of advantages, we have done our duty in placing before our readers the new project. Let them not hastily condemn it. A study of the map and the Punjab Report on Central Asia may convince them that it is as feasible, and likely to be as profitable, as the Euphrates valley line. When the revival of Asia comes we doubt not that the continent will see both.—Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LIGHTLE CASE.—The great Lightle case comes on for trial to-morrow (May 3). I shall watch it, and let you know all about it. Meantime I may as well introduce the parties to you, those dead as well as those alive. I call this the great Lightle case, because it has already been the cause of great sport in this city, as already explained; also, because our oldest local paper has taken Lightle under protection, and made a dead set against one of the accused and

Mr. Monck Mason. On the 30th June, 1857, a Christian family of nine persons were living together in a house in the neighbourhood of Gola-gunge; they had an empty house also adjoining; Lightle was one of these, and he is the only survivor. The family were old residents from the Nawabee era. I shall enumerate them:—1, E. A. Lightle, the witness or prosecutor; 2, Mary Detozo Bonny, his grandmother, age 70; 3, John Thomas Bonny, his uncle, age 45; 4, Anne Louisa Lightle, his mother, age 42; 5, Ellen Lightle, ne Meakins, his brother's wife, age 18; 6, George Mortimer Lightle, his brother, age 25; 7, Clementina Lightle, his niece, age 3; 8, Theodosia Delphina Bonny, his cousin age 14; 9, Tom Bonny, his cousin, age 9. Two hundred persons are accused of having murdered the last eight members of the family; twelve are now named; the names of the remaining 188 are unknown, but it is sworn that they can be "all identified." Before giving the twelve names, I may mention that Lightle prosecuted the tenth man, and him only in 1859. When asked why the other eleven names were not then given, he says he was afraid that if they heard they had been denounced they would have absconded. It must also be explained that when he brought forward the present accusation, Lightle only gave eleven names, the last name in the following list, though apparently that of a leader, was not given until after the list was closed by Mr. Blenman, the officiating Assistant District Superintendent of Police. The twelve names are:—I. Usgar Allee, alias Meer Nawab. On trial. II. Meerza Boondoo Beg. III. Syed Hoosein. IV. Abdul Hoosein. V. Ubboo Khan. VI. Meer Kullun, arrested but not identified, released. VII. Aga Meerza, alias Jemadar Sahib, a one-handed man. VIII. Eusuff Khan. IX. Mahummud Hoosein. X. Seedee Jowheer, accused in 1859, case dismissed. XI. Ameer Allee. XII. Agha Ahmed Allee. On trial. The witnesses named for the trial are seventeen in number:—1, Edwd. Augustus Lightle; 2, Golab, gravedigger; 3, Futeh Ali; 4, Mussummat Oomda (reported dead); 5, Nadir Mirza; 6, Mr. Prince; 7, Hakeem Kassim Khan; 8, Nuggur Mahomed Khan; 9, Hakeem Mehndee Hussan; 10, Hakeem Mahomed Askaree; 11, Meerza, Hoosein Allee; 12, Meerza Fidda Allee Khan; 13, Hoosein Buksh; 14, Yooseof Khan, Khyrabad wallah (Kotwal of the Barradurree at time of mutiny); 15, Shoobratee; 16, Domenick Brzenza; and 17, Jacob Johannes. The two last are relatives of the accuser, and the last the well-known leading merchant of Lucknow. Lightle, the accuser, is at present a copyist in the office of the Chief Commissioner of Oudh. He did not obtain refuge in the Baillie Guard, but found shelter outside. This suspicious circumstance he appears to have explained satisfactorily, for, as the sole representative of Mr. Bonny, he was allowed compensation for that gentleman's losses. I have no wish to anticipate the evidence which may be given at the trial; but may safely tell you what facts were sworn to at the examination of the accuser before the committal of the two prisoners Nos. I. and XII. The mutineers reached Lightle's neighbourhood at about 4 p.m. of the 30th June, 1857; they ransacked and robbed the inhabited house; the family secreted themselves next door, but this building seeming to be quite empty, it escaped scrutiny, and the inmates were left in peace until about six p.m. At this time Mirza Boondoo Beg (accused II.) being an intimate friend of the family, and especially of George Mortimer Lightle, (No. 6.) hailed the inmates, and the door was readily opened to him, when a crowd rushed in, headed by accused I., II. and XII., and followed by III., IV., VII., VIII., and X., all armed and giving orders. Accused No. I. took Theodosia Bonny (No. 8) away into the house, leaving the remainder of the family in the court-yard. They remained away nearly three-quarters of an hour, and on her return the nether garments of No. 8 were bloody; she was weeping and complaining to her father that she had been violated. No. 1 struck her and ordered her to be silent. After this the family were bound with a rope and dragged into the street, except Clementina Lightle, No. 7, who was carried by her mother, No. 5. After moving on about 100 yards, No. I. snatched No. 7, and killed her; No. XII. then seized No. 5, dragged her on fifteen yards further, felled her with a sword cut, but though she offered to be his londoe (slave) despatched her with four or five cuts more. No. 5 was a European, married to George Lightle from the Agra Convent. Subsequently No. XII. killed the husband No. 6; No. II. killed No. 8, and inflicted a sword wound on witness No. 1, accused No. IV. inflicted two other sword wounds on witness, who was then carried off by III., IV., VI. and VII., in the hope of getting him to discover Mr. Bonny's wealth, but after being taken back to the house witness adroitly escaped; secreted himself until an old servant came to his assistance, and got him shelter for a few days; eventually he was employed by a Zemindar as a plough-boy and continued thus until reoccupation, when he came in. Before being taken away he saw No. 9 killed by three or four persons unknown; while passing through the deserted streets with his servant afterwards, he saw the bodies of No. 3 and 4; No. 3 ran away soon after the family was dragged into the street, and has not been heard of since.—Correspondent of Delhi Gazette.—The trial of the case "Lightle v. Aga Ahmed Ali and Bundoo Beg," who, it will be remembered, stand charged with the murder of some members of Mr. Lightle's family during the mutiny of 1857, commenced at Lucknow on the 1st inst. Colonel Barrow, C.B., Commissioner of Lucknow, who presided, was assisted by four assessors, two European and two Native. Mr. Newton, barrister-at-law, appeared for the prosecution, and Mr. Johnston, of the Calcutta bar, for the defence. It is remarked by a contemporary that this is the first occasion on which two barristers have been arrayed against each other at the bar of any of the local courts, and the event is expected to create some excitement. The first day's proceedings were occupied by the address of the counsel for the prosecution, from which we gather the following particulars. Previous to the mutiny the two prisoners were intimately acquainted with the Lightle family, the only surviving member of which is the prosecutor in this case. This friendship, instead of inducing compassion, as might have been expected, appears to have had a contrary effect, for the prisoners proceeded to the house on the first outbreak of disturbances and demanded admittance at the door, which was closed for protection, under the assurance of friendly aid. On gaining admittance under this pretence "they used the knowledge which friendly intercourse had furnished them with, and demanded the production of Rs. 3,000, known by them to be secreted in the house." The grandmother, under the threat of being instantly killed, produced the money, but "not until some cuts with a sharp sword had been given." Not satisfied with this, a female member of the family was violently assaulted and forcibly ravished by one of the party, and subsequently cut to pieces by Bundoo Beg, in the presence of Ahmed Ali, the second prisoner. The other members of the family were tied with ropes in a circle, and one by one disposed of. The counsel for the prosecution made some emphatic remarks upon the length of time which had elapsed since the perpetration of the crime and the trial of the prisoners. "The question naturally arises," he said, "why no earlier investigation took place? This point will be satisfactorily answered; but I would not wish you to labour under any misgivings that time lends any immunity. Fortunately for the ends of justice, it is not so. The hand of Providence, which metes out retributive justice, points at ever so late a period to the perpetrators of foul deeds. And to that avenging hand may we ascribe the presence of the prisoners at the bar to-day, to answer the awful charges brought against them. Time, I shall be able to prove to you (if my witnesses are still true), has in no way effaced the indelible impression which their fiendish countenances must at the time have made. Proof of the most positive character I shall bring before you, and also evidence to show what agency money has procured in order to destroy such positive evidence. Stratagems, I may say, of equally as diabolical a character as the deeds for which the prisoners stand charged, have been resorted to to establish a conspiracy against the prosecutor, Mr. Lightle, and the manner in which that was defeated goes further to show that the hand which leads to the detection of crime affords also protection to the innocent." This trial will probably occupy some days, the number of witnesses to be examined being little short of one hundred.—Bengal Hurkaru, May 6.

OPENING OF THE CANAL BETWEEN MIDNAPORE AND BALASORE.—No estimate of the importance of canals in India, whether for purposes of irrigation or navigation, can possibly be over-rated, although the pecuniary advantages immediately resulting to the Government may not always have equalled the sanguine anticipations of the projectors. Hitherto we have heard great things of the expectations that are entertained with reference to the vast works constructed in the Upper Provinces, or projected in the Presidency of Madras, but little or nothing is ever said on what is going on almost at our own doors and under our very eyes. The East India Irrigation and Canal Company, it will be readily remembered, undertook to complete with a capital of two millions sterling, untrammelled by any Government guarantee, a triangular scheme of water communication between Midnapore, Tumlook, and Balasore. On the first day of this month the first section of the canal between Midnapore and the Hooghly was opened for public traffic by Mr. J. Kimber, the district engineer. Boats, therefore, now pass freely between Oolabarrah on the Hooghly and Mohisrakha Ghat on the Damoodah. The actual distance, it is true, is only seven and a-half miles, but the completion of this link is full of happy augury for the further rapid progress of the company's works. The channel is ten feet six inches in depth, and from sixty to one hundred feet in width, but at present it is only navigable in dependence on the tides. Before many months, however, have elapsed, locks will be constructed at both ends, so that the navigation will be freely practicable at all times and seasons. The lower or seaboard line of water communication between Calcutta and Balasore is also steadily advancing. The first section of eight miles between Bankwallah on the Roopnarain, a little below Tumlook, and the Uldee, was opened a few months ago by the company's engineer, Mr. J. Dyer, so that a secure navigation is already provided between this port and the Uldee. This line is chiefly intended as an inland navigable canal between Calcutta, Tumlook, and Balasore, but the two other lines—from Oolabarrah to Midnapore, and thence to Balasore—combine works of irrigation with the ordinary objects of water communication. Undertakings of this kind are strictly legitimate speculations, and are deserving of all encouragement and success. We care not how many joint-stock companies are got up for such purposes, which differ from the stock-jobbing bubbles of the day as does light from darkness. With such a manifest superabundance of idle capital in Calcutta, it is surprising that more companies are not projected on similar principles, and with quite as good prospect of success, as the one to whose steady progress we have endeavoured, however feebly, to do tardy justice.—Hurkaru, May 6.

ANNUAL REPORT ON RAILWAYS IN INDIA.—Is it absolutely necessary that all official reports in this country should be twelve months behind time? What possible reason can there be why the returns of railway accidents, for instance, in the year 1861, should only now be published at the end of April, 1863? Not later, however, than never; and as there is very little to note in these statistics of the killed and injured, no great harm will have risen from the delay. On the Bengal division of the E. I. Railway, 4,794,860 passengers travelled on the 261 miles of rail, with injury to only one passenger. Of persons connected with the line, twenty-five were killed and fifty-four injured, and of persons unconnected with the line, three of the former and two of the latter, making a grand total of twenty-eight killed and fifty-seven injured. On the 171 miles of the N. W. P. division, two passengers were killed out of the 265,135 conveyed on that line; four servants of the company were killed and four injured, and two trespassers killed—one by his own act—making a total of eight fatal and four serious accidents. The Madras Railway conveyed 1,195,787 passengers over 230 miles without the slightest accident. Five servants of the company, however, and one trespasser were killed, and one servant and one trespasser more or less injured; giving a total of six killed and two injured. The Great Southern of India Railway, again, exhibits only one fatal accident to one of its own servants, though 65,050 passengers were carried along its brief distance of 9½ miles. The Bombay G. I. P. Railway, on its 368 miles of rail, had 6 passengers injured, 12 servants, and 12 trespassers killed, and 24 servants and 4 trespassers injured; or, in the aggregate, 24 and 34 respectively. On the 107 miles of the Bombay, Baroda, and Central India Railway two passengers, five of the company's servants, and two trespassers were killed, or nine in all; and one passenger, and two of the company's servants injured, or three in all. Lastly, on the 66 miles of the Sindh Railway two of the servants and one trespasser were killed, and one of the servants injured. Thus, while 4,198,893 passengers travelled on the 541 miles of railway in the Bombay Presidency, 36 lives were lost and 37 persons injured. The proportion of deaths among passengers on the N. W. P. Division of the East Indian line, owing to causes beyond their control, was 7.54 per million, while of passengers injured in a similar manner on the three Bombay lines it was 1.45 in the million. The total proportion on all the Indian lines in 1861 was .27 killed and .80 injured per million, while in Great Britain the proportion was respectively .15 and 3.20.—Bengal Hurkaru, May 1.

POSTAL SUBSIDY.—We have been kindly furnished by a friend well qualified to perform the task with the following details of the postal subsidy of the Messageries Impériales. The mileage of the company is as follows:—

	Miles.
Marseilles to Alexandria	1,408
Suez to Aden	1,308
Aden to Galle	2,135
Galle to Singapore	1,504
Singapore to Saigon	637
Saigon to Hong Kong	915
Hong Kong to Shanghai	800
Total	8,707
Aden to Reunion	2,475
Galle to Calcutta	1,319
Saigon to Manila	908

Total distance, one way ... 13,439
Going and returning will, therefore, be double this distance, or ... 26,878
Per month, equal to, per annum ... 322,536
The annual subsidy is said to be £300,000, which shows a rate of 18s. 7d. per mile.—Daily Post.

CHERRA.—There is no news from Cherra except that which concerns the disposition of troops. The only troops now in the hills are the 21st and 44th N. I. The 21st is stationed at Jowai; the latter remains in its old quarters at Cherra. The 1st police battalion has gone down to Sylhet, where it is to remain for the present. The Government is evidently pleased, as it has good reason to be, with the conduct of the Eurasian and native Christian battery of artillery during the recent campaign. The corps was organised, during the mutinies, by Brigadier-general Showers, and the "little war" gave them the first taste they have had of serious fighting. Their services have been appreciated by the Government, for we understand that the battery is to be armed with Armstrong guns, six-pounders. Having returned from their first campaign with credit to themselves, the morale of the brigade will be higher than ever. The men of the brigade, men chiefly of the Upper Provinces, were always well-ordered and well-behaved, but hitherto they had had no fights to boast of. Their self-respect must be greater now. They are soldiers not in prospect, but actually.

ALLAHABAD, May 5.—His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor left Allahabad for Agra by the 4 p.m. mail train yesterday. Mr. Simson, the secretary to Government, the private secretary, and Captain Armstrong, aide de-camp, accompanied the Hon. Mr. Drummond. It is expected that the Lieutenant-Governor will remain in Agra till the 7th, and will proceed on that day to Allypore, and go on from thence via Meerut to Nynsee Tal. Mr. Erskine, our Deputy Collector and Accountant-General, preceded this party by a few days. This is the first occasion on which an officer of the Financial Department has gone with the Lieutenant Governor to the hills; but I believe, in the present instance, it was not so much the necessity arising from work which has taken Mr. Erskine up as the bad state of his health. He has taken with him a small establishment connected with the Budget Department to carry on the urgent work which may arise.

MILITARY MATTERS.—Lieutenant May, of the Quarter-master General's Department, has come down to the Presidency, to take charge of the office just vacated by Major Garden, pending the arrival of Major Lumaden from Peshawar. Five officers of the late company's armies, one of them at present an aid-de-camp on the personal staff of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief in India, have gone over to the British line, independent, of course, of those who went to form the nine new regiments of infantry and three of cavalry; and the last Gazette received from England contains the nomination of two of the five. Several applications have also been sent in by other company's officers for a similar transfer; and we think that those who are unencumbered, and are in the early part of their military career, will act wisely in following the same course, leaving what is really no longer a military service, but the phantom of a deceased army, whose Government is gone, and whose prospects and privileges are annihilated. It has been ruled, and we think rightly, by the directors of the military fund, that, in case an officer who is named shall decline to subscribe to the fund, and so make provision for his wife in case of his death, without assigning and proving any valid reason for so doing, the wife can herself continue the subscriptions, and ensure all the advantages of the fund. An officer of the Bengal army, who has retired, refused, since the year 1851, to subscribe for the benefit of his wife, but the latter appealed to the directors, offering to pay up all subscriptions in arrears, with interest, and the directors, referring the appeal to the officers of the army, the case has been decided by a large majority in favour of the lady, who will henceforward subscribe on her own account.—Englishman, May 5.

CRINOLINE ACCIDENTS AT LUCKNOW.—Two sad accidents have occurred since my last local to you, occurring from a too full display of crinoline, one of which, I am sorry to say, has ended fatally. Last week, at Fyzabad, Miss Nicholson, daughter of the Opium Agent there, while passing a light, her dress by some accident took fire, and she was in a blaze before assistance could be rendered; however, the fire was put out, but not before Miss Nicholson was much burnt, and I am glad to say letters state she is progressing to recovery. The second accident occurred here to the daughter of Mrs. Collingwood, the milliner, whose crinoline caught fire, and she was burnt so frightfully that she died on Wednesday last. I believe these are the first cases of residents in India losing their lives from crinolines catching fire, as yet noted, and it is strange they should both have occurred in this province; had we heard of it occurring in any of the hill stations it would not have been so surprising. Let us hope the ladies there will take warning.—Lucknow Correspondent of Delhi Gazette.

WRECK.—The Telegraph Gazette of Wednesday evening reported that the ship Iskendershak, outward bound for China, whilst proceeding down the river in tow of the tug Scalos, ran aground above Fultah. She filled rapidly, and yesterday afternoon had seventeen feet of water in her hold, and was rapidly breaking up. At present no cause is assigned for the accident, but we understand that an official inquiry will take place.

A WHALE!—SINGAPORE, April 8.—As the mail steamer leaves this evening, and we won't have another for some days, I send you the latest news, in continuation of my letter of the 6th. In my last I mentioned that the captain and passengers of the wrecked ship Hotspur still remained unheard of, but by information just received from Siam news has been received of their safe conveyal to Bangkok, without any casualties, by a Chinese junk. One lady is, however, very ill, and is not expected to survive—name not known—nor have any particulars been yet received of this miraculous escape from a watery grave. The captain of the Chinese junk refuses to receive any recompense from those he has assisted, but the inhabitants of Bangkok have determined to make him a present of 2,000 dols. as a mark of their high estimation of his services. The following from the Straits Times seems "very like a whale," but the editor vouches for the correctness of the story:—"We have received the following account of a rather extraordinary addition to the danger of the seas from Captain Donovan, and his statement we have found by actual inquiry is corroborated by all the crew of the vessel:—"Extract of the log of the British barque Marys.—Friday, Jan. 9, 1863, lat. 40. 0' S., long. 66 E., at 2 P.M., a large whale attacked the vessel, and continued for two hours to strike us so heavy that we had all the feeling as if the vessel was on a shoal; upon two occasions it struck the rudder so heavy that it was in great danger of being unshipped, and from the appearance of large cuts on the back of the whale, supposed to be done by the copper on the ship's bottom, we have every reason to fear that the vessel has received great damage.—Signed, D. Donovan, master; C. Analein, mate; A. Townsend, second mate. The captain informed us that the whale, which was a right one, came alongside evidently with the intention of clearing the barnacles off his back; and this he managed so effectually that the dirt was seen to go astern in streaks, the vessel at that time going one and a-half knots through the water. At least twenty musket balls were fired into him, and, as he lay alongside, one of the men, named Lombardini, laying hold of a rope, actually jumped on the whale's back; the whale taking no notice of his unusual visitor. All this time the whole crew were assaulting the whale with axes, adzes, crow-bars, and bayonets; part of one of the latter was left in his back, it having broken; the remaining piece was shown to us. The wounds from these instruments caused so much blood that the water was dyed for some distance around, and numerous sharks were playing about the whale. After about two hours he went off, apparently confused with the loss of blood. On arrival here, several pieces of copper were found to be rubbed off the ship's bottom, she having been coppered just previously to her leaving England."

THE "CEYLON PIONEERS," of whom we wrote a short while ago, are about to embark for their destination:—The native corps of Muzbee Sikhs, raised for service in Ceylon, and to be called the Ceylon Pioneers, has arrived at the presidency, under the command of Major MacMullin, en route for their destination; and the steamer Indiana has been taken up for their conveyance. Two officers of the 25th Punjab N.I. at Barrackpore have been transferred to the Ceylon Pioneers, and ordered to join forthwith; but neither we, nor, we believe, they, are yet aware of the conditions as to pay and allowances on which they are to serve in Ceylon. As, however, they have been ordered to the new corps, and to serve out of India, without any application of their own to do so, we take it for granted that they will be paid as if serving in India.—Delhi Gazette, May 5.

ROORKEE.—According to the Allahabad Gazette, additional troops are to be located forthwith at Roorkee. This resolve has followed rapidly on the visit of inspection lately paid by Sir Hugh Rose to that station. New barracks are already being erected to meet the increased accommodation required. Our contemporary expresses some surprise that Roorkee, which is not more than sixty miles from Rajpore, at the foot of the Mussoorie range of hills, has not, long ere this, been made a large depot for troops.—Hurkarn, May 8.

THE ALMORAH TRAGEDY.—To the Editor of the Delhi Gazette.—Sir,—As I am given to understand that two or three accounts of the way in which Lieutenant Layton, Royal Artillery, met his death are in circulation, I should feel obliged by your publishing the circumstances as seen by myself, one of the principal actors in this truly melancholy scene. A party composed of Lieutenants Layton, Hedges, Nolan, and myself was made up at Nynce Tal, for the purpose of visiting the snows. In prosecution of our intended trip, on the morning of the 20th of April, we walked from Thakuta (fourteen miles from Almora) on our way to Bagasur, that being our route. At about three o'clock P.M. on the 20th we had got as far on our way as the Goomtee River, over which the road passes by a bridge through the town of Bagasur to the dak bungalow, for which we were making. The four of us, with our shikaries, stood on the bridge a few minutes looking at the fish in the river. We asked our shikaries if we could get any fish-hooks in the bazaar, as we proposed a day's fishing, and the shikaries said they would inquire in the bazaar, and walked on before us to the bazaar for that purpose. The servants might have got twenty or thirty yards on the way when Lieutenant Layton and myself continued our walk towards the dak bungalow, the road to which runs through the Bagasur bazaar. As we approached the bazaar I was about a yard in front of Layton. We had arrived within about eight yards of the bazaar when I chanced to look up at the first house. I saw from an open doorway the barrels of a double barrel gun pointing at me. Not dreaming any one was going to fire, but not liking the look of a double barrel gun pointing at me, I shifted out of the line of fire. As I shifted, the man holding the gun fired, and poor Layton, who was just behind me, fell. I ran on, got my gun from the shikari, and took up a position behind a stone wall opposite the house, covering the doorway from which the shot was fired. From my position I could see the barrels of a gun pointing from behind a leaf of the door. I waited till the man holding the gun showed a bit of his head round the door, and then fired at him, but missed. The man behind the door then said to me, "tum bhi marna walla hai." While this was taking place Lieutenants Hedges and Nolan joined me in the garden, having succeeded in getting their guns from their shikaries. Hedges and Nolan took up my position covering the doorway, while I went with two of the shikaries on to the road to try and pick up poor Layton, who was lying in front of the doorway. As I was moving up the road towards the house, the man made a rush out of the doorway, gun in hand, and got on to the door-step, when he was shot in the face with shot by Lieutenant Hedges, and fell. I had his gun secured, and went to poor Layton, whom I found quite dead, the ball having entered his breast just over his heart. Thus died poor Layton, shot by a man he had never seen nor heard of. From the post mortem examination of the body, it appears that poor Layton was shot by a bullet made of a hammered up pin, and that his death must have been instantaneous, the ball having passed through his heart. The name by which Lieutenant Layton's murderer goes is Joga Sirdar. He was formerly a servant of Colonel Ramsey's, and is said to have been in his service some years. About ten years ago he went to visit his village (Bagasur), and was seen to sow the money he had saved in a field, since which period he has been considered a harmless idiot. The house he lived in was built for him by Col. Ramsey, and he was in receipt of a pension of Rs. 5 a month from the same officer. The gun with which he shot Lieutenant Layton was a present to him, I believe, from Colonel Ramsey while he was in his service. He is said to have had it by him ever since. When questioned by me for his reason of shooting Lieutenant Layton, he replied, "that he wanted to have shot Mr. Colvin, the Deputy Commissioner, but that as he could not get him he shot the first Sahib he could get, as we were all brothers." The explanation of this I believe to be that he wanted his pension increased, and seems to have thought that Mr.

Colvin had been the principal person in preventing it. The murderer is now in the Almora prison, but as he is badly wounded, some doubts are entertained of his life.—Yours faithfully, A. J. WAKE, Lieut. D. Battery, 2nd R. H. Brigade.—Delhi Gazette, May 5, 1863.

SIMLA.—April 27.—Absence from Simla for three weeks, and distance from any post-office, have prevented me from communicating either with newspapers or friends. I have the pleasure now to offer the news of the month. Not much, certainly, nor exciting; but that I cannot help. The Viceroy arrived here at 10 A.M. on the morning of the 4th, having travelled up by the new road, and was received by a guard of honour, composed of a small detachment of the 42nd (Black Watch), as many of the 2nd Punjab or Simla Volunteers as were present in the station, and a party of the 2nd Punjab Infantry. It was a meet reception for a descendant of the Bruce, on arriving at his mountain abode to find those stalwart Highlanders drawn up to salute him, with the Simla Volunteers and the swartly Punjabees on their left, the whole presenting arms together as accurately, and in as good time, as if they had been drilled together, although they never met before. The Simla Volunteers are somewhat proud of being the first Indian volunteer corps that has formed part of a guard of honour for the Viceroy. His lordship rode in, attended by a few of his staff, all those of army head-quarters, two excepted, who were on duty with Sir Hugh Rose in the lower ranges, and the principal inhabitants of the station. The Commander-in-Chief arrived late on the evening of the 10th instant, and was visited next day by Lord Elgin. You have been misinformed about the baggage of the latter having been detained at Kalka for want of hill porters. Simla is rather independent of porters, having a waggon train plying between this and Umballah. But everything belonging to the two great camps is conveyed upon the carts and the camels belonging to Government, which are in use on the march. The station, as yet, is very quiet. Business appears to be the order of the day with the two great men; but the 20th was ushered in by a royal salute from the guns, and was kept as a general holiday, on account of the Prince of Wales's marriage. In the evening a ball was given at Government-house. The weather has been fickle during the past week. There have been several slight showers, and much thunder and lightning. Thermometer, 58° to 60° in-doors at noon. The collegiate school at Jutogh fills but slowly, the number of pupils being to-day only twenty-two. Perhaps the principal is in no hurry for more, as no new buildings have yet been erected; or it may be the high terms have deterred parents from applying for admission for their sons, as I know to have been the case. Almost every house in Simla is tenanted already, and Kussoowle is very full also. The convalescent depot there has nearly a thousand men, many of them in tents, the roofing-in of the barracks, burnt down three years ago, not being completed. Large quantities of timber go down daily from hence for roofing, there being no good pine timber below Simla.—Englishman.

LIMITED LIABILITY.—Companies on this principle are just now the rage in Calcutta. We have limited liability newspapers, limited liability hotels, limited liability apothecaries' shops, and limited liability funeral companies, and now we are informed that three establishments, one coach building, one livery stable, and one jeweller's establishment, are to be added to the lot. As for tea-growing limited liability concerns, the head-quarters of one is to be found at every street corner in Calcutta.—Phoenix.—Our contemporary will be surprised, and perhaps pleased to learn of a novel "limited liability" company about to start in these parts. Government offer one lac for the Nana alive, and half that sum for his carcase, a joint-stock company is about being formed for the capture of the scoundrel. It will go under the designation of "Hunting-down-capturing-or-killing-the-Nana Company" (limited).—Delhi Gazette.

JYNTEAH FIELD FORCE.—The Government has sanctioned in the case of Colonel Dunsford, C.B., commanding the Jynteah Field Force, the staff allowance of a brigadier of the second class, Rs. 800 per month, from the time he assumed command and commenced hostilities in the beginning of December last; and to his staff officer the staff allowance of a brigade major, from the same date.

Dacca, May 2.—THE EX-RAJAH OF JYNTIA.—You are aware that it is the intention of the Government to remove the ex-Rajah of Jyntia from his hills and locate him in Dacca. There is one little fact connected with this Jyntia business that has all through the disturbances been kept sedulously concealed. Two or three years ago, as you have no doubt heard, the Jyntias tried their hand at revolt. The Government had assumed the administration of the hills, pensioning the chief; but when these savages rose up against us (it being clear that the Jyntia Rajah was actively engaged in fomenting the disturbance), the Government expressly ordered that he should be removed to Dacca. The revolt ended, and the Jyntias went quietly back to their homes, but no one thought of sending the Rajah to Dacca. The Government order, as it subsequently appeared, had been entirely overlooked by the local authorities, and the fellow was left to nurse the next rebellion. As soon as the revolt only just suppressed broke out, the Government wanted to know where the Jyntia Rajah was, and why he was not in Dacca; and the only reply that could be returned was, that the letter ordering his removal had been forgotten! But who was to blame? With a commissioner in Dacca whose jurisdiction extended to Sylhet, and officials in Sylhet whose jurisdiction extended to Cherra, and officials in Cherra who recognised no authority, save that of the Commissioner of Assam, it was a hopeless undertaking to fix the responsibility on any particular individual at all; and as nobody volunteered to bear the blame, nothing more was said about a culpable oversight, which no doubt has had much to do with the late revolt.

THE BRAHMA SAMAJ.—The following alludes to the "Brahma Samaj" of Calcutta. This institution has a branch at Allahabad, we believe. It is a wide step in the direction of Christianity:—"Everywhere, but especially in India, it is difficult for a foreigner to estimate aright the value of any force that may exist in society. But the least observant cannot help watching with interest what is called the Bramhist movement at present going on in Calcutta. The Bramhos may be described as Hindoos whom English education and influences have led to a pure theism. In the majority this is a mere intellectual belief restraining neither from idol-worship nor from an immoral life. But in the case of its high priest Debandranath Tagore, and most fervent expounder Keshub Chunder Sen, this theism is a belief which is adapted to satisfy their aspirations and regulate their lives. The Bramhos have a regular church or 'Bramha Samaj,' and a formal service consisting of prayer, chanting, and ethical discourses. They support an English newspaper, and find their disciples in the State schools; the students of the missionary schools, being further spiritually advanced, seldom join them. The Bramhos have been roused by a lecture by a Bengali clergyman attacking their system, Keshub Chunder Sen has replied, and he will be again answered. This contest has caused no little excitement, and promises to issue in good. While the Bramhos still stoutly defend Intuition as the only source of religious knowledge, and scout all revelations, whether the Vedas or the Holy Scriptures, they are unphilosophical enough to abstain from an attempt to define the limits, or use any criteria as the tests of Intuition. But they have made a great advance in recognising the existence of sin, and the necessity in God's nature for its punishment. Here they rest meanwhile without one ray of hope, such as only Christianity gives, of deliverance from its power and its penalty. But to this they are coming, and we trust the controversy will continue to be as fairly conducted as it has been hitherto."

THE OPIUM REVENUE.—Set the cultivation [of the poppy] throughout India perfectly free, with the exception of restrictions absolutely necessary to preserve the revenue from fraud, and the produce of opium would be largely increased; in that case, a smaller duty would yield the same amount of revenue as at present, owing to larger exportations, and the price of the drug in the China market would be advantageously lowered, so that the growth of the poppy in China would be neglected. The more we examine the question, the more convinced are we that it would be better for the Government, better for our merchants, and far better for our ryots, if the present monopoly system were abandoned, and free trade in opium permitted to all India. Bengal has always laid claim to the credit of producing more revenue than any other presidency in India. It does not, however, require much trouble to show that she decks herself out with borrowed feathers. We admit that, as the returns are made up at present, those for Bengal far surpass in amount those for Madras; but we deny that all the sums credited to her are produced from the taxation of the Bengalees. The whole of the customs duties on goods consumed in the North-West Provinces ought, as a matter of fairness, to be deducted from the receipts of the Calcutta Custom House, beside those for many other districts; the returns from opium, too, should be left out of the question, as they come from China; and then we should like to see how far ahead the petted presidency stands, when compared with her less favoured sisters.—Madras Athenæum. "The moral justification of the opium revenue," says Sir Charles Trevelyan, "follows the parallel of the Home Excise upon spirits. Is it best to check the consumption of opium by placing the highest possible tax upon it, or by leaving the cultivation and export entirely free, to give to the Chinese the means of unlimited indulgence in their favourite drug? There is only one other alternative, which is, without taking any revenue from opium, to maintain an army of preventive officers in the interior and round the coasts of India, to secure the entire cessation of the cultivation." We reply that there is another alternative which Sir Charles Trevelyan has overlooked. We believe that the proper course is for the State to withdraw altogether from the cultivation and manufacture of the drug, fixing the excise thereon at the highest productive limit. The question was long since exhausted in our columns, and we are surprised that Sir Charles Trevelyan should affect ignorance of a policy that most parties, we believe, are agreed in believing to be the right one.

SIR HUGH ROSE.—Is there more than one Priestley in the field? Or does Sir Hugh Rose propose to introduce the Austrian system of military espionage into the Indian army? If so, his Excellency is certain signally to fail, for British officers will never tolerate the presence of tale-bearers and spies in the mess-room, or in the midst of social gatherings. Unless we are greatly deceived—and on that head we have not the slightest apprehension—only a few days ago a distinguished officer, who had reason to expect a certain appointment, suddenly found himself in disgrace, and at the same time received a hint to be more careful for the future as to his conversation. Sir Hugh Rose has now tried the patience of the public to the extreme point of endurance, and will find that not even the sympathetic tolerance of H.R.H. the General Commanding-in-Chief will much longer avail to screen him from merited disgrace and a speedy removal from a post he has shown himself unfitted to hold.—Bengal Hurkurn, May 5.

BENGAL BRANCH OF THE BRITISH MEDICAL ASSOCIATION.—With a view to watch over the growing interests of the medical profession in this country, some of the medical officers have proposed to establish a Medical Association, to be designated the Bengal Branch of the British Medical Association. Several covenanted officers, as well as the graduates of the Medical College, have supported the project. Opinion is divided, however, as to whether the proposed association ought to be an independent one, or a branch institution.

OPIUM SALE.—The following are the particulars of the opium sale held at the Exchange rooms, Calcutta, on May 6:—

	Chests.	Highest.	Lowest.	Average.	Proceeds.
Behar ...	1860	1425	1415	1420 8 4	26,42,175
Benares...	1440	1355	1345	1350 6 10	19,46,175

MR. F. SCHILLER has been elected a member of the Committee of the Chamber of Commerce by a large majority.

UNCOVENANTED DEPUTY MAGISTRATES.—In consequence of the recent increase of the number of uncovenanted deputy magistrates, which is considered to be more than the actual service required, the Government of Bengal has in contemplation the abolition of the offices of extra deputy magistrates in several districts. The number of permanent deputy magistrates employed in the Mofussil at present amounts to about two hundred, besides a large number of supernumerary ones, and about forty extra officers.

MR. PETERSON, THE CALCUTTA BARRISTER, AND MEMBER OF THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.—Mr. Peterson's name will hereafter be associated in many men's minds with the imposition of a licence-tax. Such associations are not usually of a very pleasing character, but in the present instance the justice of the unpopular measure introduced by the learned gentleman will be universally recognised. It would have been manifestly unfair to compel the poor retail dealer to pay for permission to earn a scanty livelihood, while his wealthy brethron enjoyed a delightful immunity from similar imposts. However disagreeable, then, it may be to pay a hundred, or even fifty rupees a year for the privilege of growing rich, no well-to-do merchant or tradesman will seek to repudiate his liability to contribute to the resources of the town, so long as the humble stall-keeper is constrained to pay for the few square yards of public ground on which he carries on his petty trade for the convenience of hundreds yet poorer than himself. Barristers, perhaps, may complain, like the eagle brought down by an arrow plumed from its own wings, that the friend of their bosom, with whom they had many a time taken pleasant counsel together, should have worked them this cruel injury. But even they will, no doubt, both gracefully and graciously hand over their gold mohurs to the common funds, and only regret that they are not called upon to do more for the place in which they flourish, like a green bay-tree by the side of running waters.

MILITARY MISCELLANEA.—Deputy-inspector-general of Hospitals J. H. K. Innes, of H.M.'s British army, has been ordered out to India, and will arrive in Calcutta by the next steamer. Surgeon Innes served in this country before with the 2nd Battalion H.M.'s 60th Rifles, of which he held medical charge during the siege of Delhi and subsequent military operations. Dr. G. S. Beatson, hitherto serving as a deputy-inspector-general H.M.'s British forces, in the Madras presidency, has arrived in Calcutta as Inspector-general for Bengal, vice Dr. Linton, whose tenure of office terminated on the 30th ult., and who returns to England. Dr. Beatson served as surgeon of H.M.'s 51st Regiment in the last Burmese war. Dr. J. G. Inglis, of H.M.'s 64th Regiment, is brought upon the list of deputy-inspectors-general in England, and ordered out to Madras to succeed Dr. Beatson; and Deputy-inspector-general J. H. Innes, C.B., whose arrival is expected by next steamer, comes out to relieve Dr. Prendergast, deputy-inspector-general at Lucknow, who retires on his pension after twenty-five years' service. Dr. J. B. Kinsey, who went up to Dinapore to officiate as deputy-inspector of hospitals, in the room of Dr. J. Balfour, having been superseded by the appointment of Dr. McCrae to that circle, goes, we understand, to Umballa, to replace Dr. Faithful, deputy-inspector-general, absent on medical certificate.—Englishman.

THE RAJAH OF CHIRKAREE has abolished all transit duties on those portions of the Sangor and Cawnpore road, the road from Koobrai via Humepore and the Myhere Banda Road, which pass through his estates. The Rawunt Motea Singh of Rajgurh has also abolished the transit duty on cotton within his estate.

HOMICIDAL MANIA AND MORAL INSANITY.—Under this heading the Saturday Review, of March 31st, exposes many of the fallacious notions which have been entertained, grounded on medical evidence, regarding the moral responsibility of criminals labouring under what is called moral insanity. The question is of interest to us just now, because a case has recently occurred in which the principle of the non-responsibility of men said to be "morally insane," if acted on, will assuredly cheat justice of a victim; and, living as we do in a country in which we are surrounded by thousands of fanatics thirsting for European blood, many of whom may doubtless plead "moral insanity" in expiation of the crime of murder, it becomes a very serious question, the extent to which such men are to be held liable for the consequence of their crimes. Had the so-called madman of Bagesur, who murdered Lieutenant Layton the other day, been a European soldier and his victim a native, small indeed would have been his chance of escape from the gallows! No plea of moral insanity would have been allowed in that case to stand between justice and its victim. Let us see how far this plea for the murderer of Lieutenant Layton may be allowed to screen him from the punishment due for one of the most revolting acts of bloodshed we have read of since 1857. There was a case somewhat analogous to this of a youth named Burton, tried at Maidstone for murder. It appears that the prisoner admitted that he had made up his mind to murder somebody—he had no particular animosity against his victim—he had a mania for murder—a "moral insanity," which urged him to shed human blood. The argument on the trial took the form of a medico-scientific psychological discussion as to a man's responsibility while labouring under certain mental disorders called "moral insanity." A medical witness gave it as his opinion on evidence, that he believed the prisoner knew perfectly well what he was doing, but had no control over himself. "To Mr. Justice Wightman," adds the Saturday Review, commenting on this case, "society is under a deep debt of gratitude, for the indignant scorn with which he brushed away the medical fallacies on this doctrine of homicidal mania." The doctrine laid down by the judges was thus defined by Justice Wightman:—"There must be such a defect of reason from disease of the mind as that the person did not know the nature and quality of the act he committed, or did not know whether it was right or wrong." The jury returned a verdict of "guilty," which "seemed," we are told, "to give general satisfaction." If, as Justice Wightman further remarked, the doctrine that moral insanity carries with it irresponsibility for a man's acts, is a most dangerous doctrine, and fatal to the interest of society, and the security of life—if this is the case in England, how much more dangerous is it in this country? This murderer of Bagesur, Colonel Ramsay's favoured pensioner, being morally insane, is nevertheless entrusted with fire-arms by the commissioner himself. He threatened to take Mr. Colvin's life, and being unable to do that, resolved to take the life of the first European he came across—and has done so. In what does his case differ from Burton's quoted above? When a European soldier in a fit of sudden anger takes the life of a native, even without intending it, he is hounded to the gallows, amid the execration of the public, and any plea for mercy is drowned amid loud cries about the carelessness of native life among Europeans. The native Press, thirsting for European blood, raises its voice to put the authorities on their mettle, and threatens to get up a cry of "partiality" if mercy is allowed to interfere. For Lieutenant Layton's murderer they will doubtless be ready with the out and dried argument about non-responsibility and "moral insanity," as if every fanatic was not "morally insane." If the doctrine "blood for blood" is exacted sternly, ruthlessly, and to the letter in the case of European homicides, we demand in the case of native homicides an equally stringent adherence to the law. If Lieutenant Layton's murderer be pardoned on the plea of "moral insanity," there is not a fanatic in the whole of India, who may not take (European) life with impunity.—Delhi Gazette, May 7.

A NATIVE GENERAL COURT MARTIAL has been assembled at Lucknow for the trial of the subadar who headed the mutiny of the detachment of the 15th N.I. (Loodianah), at Jounpore in 1857. The Delhi Gazette states that this man has been carrying on an extensive business as a banker since the eventful morning of the 6th June, 1857, when, after plundering the Treasury at Jounpore, he marched out of the station at the head of his detachment. Captain Lees, Deputy Judge Advocate General, conducts the proceedings, and Captain Longmore will act as interpreter to the Court.—Hurkaru, May 6.

TRAVELLING IN THE TERRITORIES OF NATIVE PRINCES.—Travelling in the territories of the Maharajah Goolal Sing, and the Maharajahs of Cashmere and Jummo, has become subject to closer restrictions latterly, in consequence of the irregularities committed by officers seeking those attractive quarters of India for sporting and recreative purposes. A declaration certificate is now required of any one seeking to travel in the territories alluded to, pledging the applicant to abide strictly by the rules laid down and provided by Government for the guidance of travellers, and he must declare that he will on no account whatever or under any circumstances interfere with the natives.

NEPOTISM IN HIGH PLACES.—Sir Barnes Peacock, Chief Justice of Bengal, has placed his son, a civilian of six years' standing, in the post of Registrar of the High Court on the appellate side, on a salary of Rs. 1,700 per mensem, upwards of £2,000 per annum, nearly double what the young gentleman was drawing as Joint Magistrate and Deputy Collector of Monghyr. His lordship has acted thus at the very time that he is struggling with the Government about the judicial patronage of the province. We can thus form an idea how he would exercise the prerogative if it were conceded to him. Oh, Sir Barnes! A bishop could not do much worse.—Mofussilite.—If the appointment was in the gift of Sir Barnes, and is not one of those to be filled by seniority promotion, is it surprising that a son qualified for the place should have been provided for? What did the late Mr. Wilson and Mr. Laing do?—Delhi Gazette.

LOCUSTS IN THE PUNJAB.—A traveller recently arrived from down country, reports that between Jullunder and the Beas he observed young locusts, unwinged, in millions upon millions, almost as numerous as the sand upon the sea shore, progressing steadily like grasshoppers towards the eastward. He also met the insect between the Beas and Umritsur, but not in such immense quantities. The vegetable and fruit gardens have been completely devastated, but fortunately the harvest of cereal crops had been gathered. "We imagine these locusts to be the progeny of the flights that passed over the Punjab some weeks since, and it is therefore evident that the vast destruction effected through the exertions of the district officers has not been productive of any sensible result."—Delhi Gazette.

ASSISTANT-SURGEON RHIND.—We mentioned some time ago that Assistant-Surgeon Rhind, who had come down with a battery of artillery from Assam, was in arrest in Fort William under charges which involved his trial by court-martial. Destiny has saved the authorities the trouble of trying this officer, as he died yesterday in Fort William. There still remain two officers in the Fort, who have been several months in arrest, pending probable trial by court-martial; but now-a-days, in many cases, the period included between an officer's offence and the promulgation of the sentence of his court-martial is as long as that required for the progress and termination of a Chancery suit.—Englishman, May 5.

THE POST OFFICE.—A proposition for abolishing the office of director-general of the post-office &c. under the consideration of the supreme Government, and the question has been referred to the Hon. W. Grey for final disposal.

AMENDED PENITENT and leave rules for the uncovenanted service will be issued shortly.

IF CHANDERNAGORE be the Boulogne of Calcutta the Port of Mutlah will one day be its Havre. A few days hence the railway will be opened for public traffic from Sealdah to the other terminal station at Mutlah, when speculators and others will be able to judge for themselves of the capabilities of that place. At present, indeed, there is not much else to be seen. With the exception of the Railway Station, the most conspicuous building is the Magistrate's Catcherry, which is slowly rising above the ground. The story has often been told of the traveller cast away upon a seemingly barren island, whose fears for his personal safety were at once dispelled by the sight of a gibbet, which he gladly hailed as a symbol of the highest order of civilization. In like manner, the Calcutta tourist will rejoice to behold that immunity for crime will not be one of the attributes of the new port, and that, if there be neither Opera-house, Restaurant, nor Church in progress, every accommodation will speedily be afforded for the infliction of fines and flogging. A little higher up the river he will see the skeleton of an extensive Godown, the property of the spirited projectors of the scheme; and nearer at hand he will gaze with interest on what be will at first suppose to be large heaps of carrots, potatoes, and turnips covered with straw to screen them from nipping frosts, but which he will eventually discover to be the habitations of human beings. With his mind's eye, however, he will see these magalia dissolving into ingentia mania, surgenteque novæ Carthaginis arcem. The least imaginative, the least sanguine, cannot fail to be struck with the capabilities of the site. A noble river six fathoms deep sweeps past calmly and steadily to the sea. There are no bores, no rushing tides or torrents, to throw up shifting sandbanks. Vessels of five or six hundred tons can at all times sail up and down the open, unobstructed channel, without other guidance than the chart; and if larger ships should prefer the assistance of a steam-tug, within twenty-four hours they can be out in the open Bay, or be towed up and moored alongside the pier now in process of construction. Here they will be loaded and unloaded by means of steam-cranes, without any unnecessary detention, and their cargoes warehoused at a moderate charge, or immediately despatched by rail to Calcutta, a distance of only ninety minutes. On both sides of the river, the land is naturally fertile, though uncultivated, and on the opposite side, at least, is capable of producing any quantity of the finest cotton and tobacco. And whenever a respectable hotel shall have been erected, there is little doubt that the residents of Calcutta will gladly avail themselves of the opportunity of escaping from the vile effluvia of this city, and of enjoying the purer air of the well-drained and less-crowded port-town on the Mutlah. Much, indeed almost everything, has yet to be done, and a whole season has been lost through the tardiness of the Government in converting the copyhold site into freehold property. So soon as that stage shall have been achieved, the rapid progress of the works for the future will have been assured. In the meantime, matters are almost at a stand-still, as no one cares to lay out money upon allotments that are not his own to do with as he pleases. One might have supposed that the Government, which is bound to pay five per cent. interest on the capital expended on the construction of the railway, would have been eager to afford every encouragement in its power to secure the success of that undertaking, and so diminish its own pecuniary obligations. So far from that being the case, it will not even incur the trifling expense of making a kutchra road from the different stations to the nearest town or village. However, as the Finance Minister now assures us that "Government desires that it may be clearly understood that any funds that can be expended with advantage on cotton roads, on works of irrigation or navigation, or on any other useful works, will be granted during the ensuing year," it is not unreasonable to expect that these necessary branch roads will be commenced without further delay. If, as Sir Charles says, there will be no difficulty about money, it is quite certain there will be no other difficulty to encounter and overcome.—Bengal Hurkaru, May 8.

SINGAPORE, April 13.—DREADFUL LOSS OF LIFE.—Information has been received here of a dreadful wholesale murder, for I can call it by no other name, out at sea. The principal workpeople in this place are Chinese, and the profit derived from their labour gives as good a return as that derived from slaves. Coolies are tempted to come to the island with a free passage and board on consideration that their masters have the benefit of their services for a year, this one year seldom ends, but as the fact is not known to men in China and elsewhere, a very large number of emigrants are taken in by the temptation of a free passage; and so it happened that one junk engaged to bring 300 men in one trip to Singapore from Macao. The consequence was that they were put on small provisions and 133 men died at sea through sheer starvation. Since the arrival of the junk in port seven more have died from the same cause in hospital which necessitated a coroner's inquest, the result of which was a verdict of manslaughter against the captain or nacadah of the junk, who, unfortunately, is now no where to be found. The remainder of the emigrants, who are miserable pictures of humanity, say that all the food they received during the voyage of one month was a little rice "congee" every day. The question this important subject raises I will leave to you, as in this instance the men were shipped at Macao, a Portuguese settlement, and it therefore requires the attention of both the English and Portuguese Governments to be drawn to the fact in order to prevent any future loss of life from the same cause.

AGRICULTURE IN THE PUNJAB.—At the last meeting of the Punjab Agri-Horticultural Society Mr. E. A. Prinsep, in a letter urging the importance of agricultural exhibitions and museums, said there is in the Punjab a growing desire to improve tillage. Intelligent villagers are always asking, "What crops are grown in London," and what implements are used? They have heard of the steam plough at Putiala, and ask if it is the same as the iron plough used in England. At Sealkote agricultural gatherings have steadily been held for three years, and now an agricultural museum is about to be started.

A SAD ACCIDENT.—The French steamer Erymanthe when getting under weigh at Garden Reach, on the 4th May, drifted on to the Arracan, which again fouled the Feroze. A young child, the son of the first officer of the Arracan, who was standing with a servant in a boat to which they had gone for safety, was swept overboard, in sight of his mother.

EXAMINATION OF ARTILLERY OFFICERS.—Subaltern officers of the new brigades of Royal Artillery will be required to undergo an examination before being promoted to the rank of second captain. The first ten senior lieutenants in Bengal will not be examined, but the next ten will be examined on July 21. Hereafter, each lieutenant as he becomes tenth on the list of subalterns will be required to undergo a similar examination.

CINCHONA OFFICIALS.—At the end of last March there were 146,548 Cinchona plants in the Government plantations on the Neilgherries. The weather being favourable, 750 plants were added to the 35,000 permanently planted out, and which are described as "making rapid growth." The increase by propagation is stated at 10,800, or about 1,500 less than the ordinary monthly average. It is satisfactory to observe that numerous applications for plants have been made by private individuals, no fewer than 44,000 plants being already bespoken. This is decidedly the most encouraging fact that has yet occurred in connection with the Cinchona experiment. If once it be taken up by private persons its success is assured, as was the case with tea-plantations. It appears from a "Memorandum" published in the Gazette, that there has been some confusion in the nomenclature of the plant, and it is therefore ruled that the species at present cultivated on the Neilgherries shall henceforth be called the Cinchona Officialis, and that its three varieties shall respectively be known as the C. Condaminea, C. Bonplandiana, and C. Crispa.

THE RESIDENT AT TRAVANCORE.—The Cochin Chronicle mentions the probable retirement of Mr. Fisher, Resident at Travancore and Cochin, and the appointment of Mr. Ballard as his successor. Mr. Fisher has made his important office far too much of a sinecure. The progress of the Victoria Canal in Travancore has been stopped. Much money is said to have been spent on a work which is impracticable. Cholera is raging at Calicut, and fever among the labourers in the Wynad.

SUB MAGISTRATES.—The Madras Government has invested the Judges of the High Court of that Presidency with authority to dismiss any sub-magistrates of the second-class, not being members of the Covenanted Civil Service, for gross official misconduct, ignorance, or inefficiency in the discharge of magisterial duties; it is, of course, open to the person so dismissed to appeal to Government. In future, the powers of the Revenue Board, in regard to the dismissal of such officers, will be confined to cases of misconduct or inefficiency shown by them in the discharge of their revenue duties.

FAILURE OF PERUVIAN COTTON SEED.—The experiment made with Peruvian cotton seed at Coimbatore in November last has proved a failure. The collector of that district states, in a letter to the Madras Government, that the seed was, on its receipt, distributed to two respectable ryots, who expressed themselves able and willing to undertake the cultivation. The seed was sown by them in garden-lands in the middle of November, and the plants at first appeared healthy and promising, but have since been entirely destroyed by worms.

CENSUS OF THE TOWNS AND SUBURBS OF MADRAS.—According to the latest assessment, the population of the town and suburbs of Madras amounted to 427,771 souls. These returns are compiled by the police, under the supervision of the municipal authorities. The population is divided into the following classes:—

COTTON.—The Madras Times estimates the acreage of the Presidency under cotton in 1862 at 840,000, and this year at 1,100,000. Of this, more than one-third was in the Bellary district, and about one-fifth in Tinnevely. This is an advance of 34 per cent. on last year. The gross assessment on these 1,100,000 acres was Rs. 1,350,000, or Rs. 1.2-4 an acre. In Tinnevely the average produce of cleaned cotton is about 86lbs. This, at the low rate of Rs. 220 per candy, gives a money value of Rs. 87-8 as; that is, in Tinnevely the assessment amounts to 2 1/2 per cent. With American cotton, such as is grown in Dharwar, and is spreading into Bellary, the produce per acre and gain to the ryot, without extra labour, would be four times what it is now. The writer justly says—"In no country of the world does the tenant pay so little for the use of the land he cultivates as the cotton ryot of Southern Hindostan. Instead of being the butt of so much special pleading and mistaken sympathy, he ought to be incited to be thankful for the protection from robbery, insult, and oppression with which he so cheaply is blessed when under the British Government."

THE RAJAH OF MYSORE.—We understand that news was received from England by the mail of March 18, that the subject of the restoration of Mysore to the Rajah was still under contemplation by H.M.'s ministers in England, and it was then thought probable that, with certain reservations and conditions, some concession in accordance with the treaty would probably be made. It is not likely that this important subject will remain much longer in abeyance, and we shall probably hear the decision of the Home Government in a few mails. Meanwhile, the demand for land for coffee cultivation, at Munjerabad and thereabouts is greatly on the increase, and we can only hope that the decision as regards the future management of the Mysore province may not affect the value of landed property in the hands of Europeans who have laid out their capital upon it.—Times of India.

OYSTER NURSERY AT TUTICORIN.—Mr. Silver, the collector of Tinnevely, has induced Government to sanction the establishment of an oyster nursery in the harbour of Tuticorin, on a bank of sand within the island about $\frac{3}{4}$ miles in length from east to west, and $\frac{1}{2}$ broad, with a depth of water of from three to seven feet. This is to be walled round with loose coral until it is formed into a basin, the edges rising three feet above high-water mark. Over the bed of this basin live coral is to be regularly spread. Dr. Kellaart is of opinion that the number of eggs contained in one oyster of five or six years of age cannot be less than 12,000,000. The total number of oysters fished during the pearl fishery of 1861 only amounted to 15,875,400. The quantity of young oysters obtained each year from the nursery will be abundant to stock banks sufficient for each year's fishery.

HYDERABAD, DECCAN.—Those persons who about fourteen months ago had conspired with the Brahmin of many names, who some short time ago was taken up at Barsee, are now undergoing the sentences passed upon them. Tooljaram, the brother of one Imrut Loll, better known as Chownee Raja, the commander of a large body of what are called disciplined troops, has been sent to the fort of Bedur, to undergo there imprisonment for ten years, to which he was sentenced. The two sabookars who were condemned to pay penalties, respectively, of seventy thousand and ten thousand rupees each, have paid the fines. The minor offenders are undergoing their sentences in the prisons of this place. It may be worth mentioning of this poor wretch Tooljaram, as it may by possibility contribute to do him some good, that his habit of constant intoxication by bhong scarcely leaves him sense to direct his actions. But, then, though this may offer some extenuation, it becomes somewhat incompatible with the apology that he should have had intellect enough to keep secret the conspiracy in which he was engaged. We move slowly here, but I suppose it is quite unavoidable to a government, for we hear nothing of the movements of your government in regard to the Brahmin who was captured at Barsee, nor of Zuhoorool Hoosein, nor of the seditious Brahmins represented as relations of the Nana, taken up at Cowpore.

BOMBAY.

THE LAST OF THE INDIAN NAVY.

At a few minutes before 12 o'clock on Thursday morning the 30th April, Commodore Frushard proceeded on board the Ajdaha, the flag-ship of the Indian Navy, and at noon precisely his broad pennant was saluted by eleven guns from the battery on the Apollo pier. Immediately afterwards the flag of the Indian Navy, the "Company's Jack," was hoisted at the Castle flag-staff, when it was saluted by twenty-one guns from the same battery. At the close of the salute, the Indian Jack was hauled down, when the broad pennant of the Commodore and the pennants of the whole of the Indian Navy vessels in harbour were simultaneously struck. On landing at the Apollo bunder, the gallant Commodore was received with a salute of eleven guns.

The following farewell order was issued by Commodore Frushard:—

"On this the last day of his authority, the Commodore commanding desires the officers and men, each and all, of the Indian Navy to accept his hearty thanks for the manner in which their several duties have been performed during the past year. During this time, circumstances had unavoidably affected the discipline of the service. A great number of officers and seamen have at different periods been attached to the flag-ship as supernumeraries, awaiting their discharge from the service, consequent upon their vessels being put out of commission; and the Commodore commanding is proud and grateful to be able to state, that at no period of the existence of the Indian Navy has there been less cause of complaint of officers or men of the service. And in bidding them farewell, he desires their acceptance of his best wishes for their future welfare. To the different officers of the Dockyard, the Commodore commanding offers his best thanks for the manner in which their several duties have been performed."

The general order that decreed this ceremony makes honorable mention of the service of this gallant navy, and expresses "the regret and sympathy" with which the Government views its extinction. These feelings have been expressed by Her Majesty's Government, and are shared to the full by the Governor in Council of Bombay. They are shared by every man in Bombay, and their existence is a silent, but sure, testimony of the respect in which the memory of the old Indian Navy will be held.

The nucleus of the Indian Navy was formed shortly after the cession of Bombay to the English Crown. In 1670, the Governor of Bombay had three men-of-war in commission, of which the Revenge, commanded by Captain Keigwin, mounting 22 guns, distinguished herself by beating off 40 vessels of the Mahratta fleet, belonging to the great Seerajee. In 1749, Commodore James, with a small squadron, we believe, conveyed Lord Clive to the capture of Severndroog, and thence to Bengal. In 1810, the vessels of this service assisted in the capture of the Isle of France, and Sir John Hayes, the Commodore, distinguished himself in the expedition against Java. The smart action between the Honourable Company's brig of war Nautilus and the American corvette Peacock, 22 guns, at the close of the American war, in which the gallant but unfortunate commander lost both his legs and one-third of his crew before surrendering, is worthy of record. An Indian Naval squadron took part in the expedition to the Persian Gulf in 1820-21 which resulted in the capture of Beni boo-ali. The Indian Navy was next engaged in the Burmah war of 1824-25. In 1839 it took a leading part in the capture of Aden, and defended it against the repeated attempts of the Arabs to retake it, and to it has ever since been confided the naval defence of that station. In the previous year, 1838, it had assisted a second time in operations in the Persian Gulf. In 1839-40, the Indian Navy gave active assistance in the capture of Kurrachee. Then came the China war in 1841-42, in which the conduct of the steam frigates of the service elicited expressions of strong approbation from both Houses of Parliament and the Naval Commander-in-Chief. The Indian Navy was next employed in Sind in 1844, and bore part in the battle of Dubba. An Indian Navy Brigade served with gallantry and distinction in New Zealand in 1846. At the siege of Mooltan in 1849, a brigade formed from the Indian Navy gained fresh reputation to its flag. In 1851, the second Burmese war broke out, when the steam frigates of the service sustained the high character they had already won. Then came a boat expedition in 1855 against a piratical chief at El Katif in the Persian Gulf; for their conduct in which the officers and men were thanked by Government. In the Persian war which immediately preceded the outbreak of the mutiny, the Indian Navy, in conjunction with the military forces, sustained the honour of the British flag, and again received the thanks of Parliament for their zeal and gallantry. Scarcely had the returning squadron reached Bombay harbour, than most of the vessels were ordered to Calcutta to transport the troops they had brought from Persia, and to form from their own men brigades to aid the land forces in quelling the mutiny. The officers and men did good service in Bengal, while those in Bombay did garrison duty, and relieved the military forces who were sent up-country. For the bombardment of Beyt and Dwarka, in 1859, the navy once more received the thanks of the Supreme Government. The last active duty in which it took part was the China war in 1860.

Though the esprit de corps of the Indian Navy has been severely tried during the last two years by the uncertainty of its fate, the service has maintained its discipline to the last. But not alone in its purely combatant character has it covered itself with honour. In the advancement of every branch of naval science, in arduous and minute surveys, the Indian Navy has been unrivalled. The officers have done more, in proportion to their numbers, than any other service in the world. Many of them, from their intimate knowledge of native affairs and character, particularly in Persia and Arabia, have rendered important political services, and filled important political appointments. The service expires, not by the hand of an enemy, nor from any want of vitality in itself, but in obedience to that highest law, which has ever governed its members, the public good. It may with confidence entrust its memory to the keeping of those whose defence has ever been its pride as well as duty, and while no tinge of jealousy mingles with its thoughts of that honourable service, to which the guardianship of the shores of our Indian Empire is now confided, its officers proudly believe, and are entitled to believe, that the honour, the lives, and the properties of their fellow-countrymen in India, were as safe in times past in their keeping as they now will be in that of their brethren of the Royal Navy:—

"Who comprehends his trust, and to the same Keeps faithful with a singleness of aim— And, therefore, does not stoop, nor lie in wait, For wealth, or honour, or for worldly state: Whom they must follow, on whose head must fall, Like showers of manna, if they come at all." The hauling down of the Indian Jack closes an era in our Indian Empire. Revolution stays here, for there is nothing more to revolutionise. The service expires too soon for the interests of science, perhaps for the interests of our country, but not too soon for its honourable and lasting mention in our national annals.—Bombay Times.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MR. SUNKERSETT.—This Parsee gentleman here alluded to, was accused of negotiating drafts drawn by the Nana and his agents. The accusation was a grave one, since Mr. Sunkersett is a member of the Bombay Council. We are glad to read the following explanation offered by the Times of India:—"It is but an act of justice to our fellow-townsmen, Mr. Juggonath Sunkersett, upon a careful perusal of the finding of the Sholapore court upon the trial of the man whom a contemporary calls 'the Nana Sahib's cousin,' to express our astonishment that any journalist should be so wanting in candour, as to attach any weight whatever to the fact that the man had issued certain hoondies upon Mr. Juggonath, under the circumstances stated in the finding. Stripped of the verbiage in which the imagination of the Saturday Reviewer has dressed the case, its facts are simple and perspicuous as the day. All over India at this moment there are the scattered fragments of the rebel gathering in the North-West a few years ago. In these circumstances, it came to the knowledge of Captain Nuttall's police, twelve months ago, that a man of the Nana's party had taken refuge as a 'byragee' in a Hindoo temple in the Nizam's territory near our frontier. We have not a vestige of proof as to whom the man really is; the account the police declare him to have given of himself being a preposterous concoction on the face of it. They make him out to be an adopted son of the late Peishwa Bajee Rao; while Nana Sahib, according to Captain Nuttall's highly intelligent police, is merely the adopted son of the brother of the late Peishwa. Having started game so well worth hunting as this, we find Captain Nuttall's police eager and vigorous in the chase, in no ordinary degree. Their victim—for such the man, in spite of his treason, clearly is, and a poor imbecile whom men of far less ability than Captain Nuttall's agents might lead into any thing,—entered into all their suggestions with enthusiasm. It is almost incredible, but true, that the stories of commissions, hoondies, and bloody decrees issued by this wretched creature, turn out to have been all written at the suggestion of the police! 'We must have money to carry on this enterprise,' say the policemen. 'Can you give us a hoondie on Juggonath Sunkersett, the great Bombay banker? We must have your authority to kill the Governor, and you must fix the price for his head, and for that of all the other sabibs of the place.' And in each case the wretched tool of these respectable instruments promptly responded to the suggestion, until at last Captain Nuttall had obtained the array of edicts and hoondies which the Saturday Reviewer parades before his readers without a hint as to the mode of their manufacture. That the man is a treasonable and fanatical wretch who deserves the sentence the High Court has passed upon him, none who have read the evidence upon which the finding rests can doubt; but all that was cvert in the conspiracy was the work of Capt. Nuttall's too intelligent police. It is a grievous wrong to Mr. Juggonath Sunkersett to have placed the case in the extremely uncandid light in which it has been presented by the Reviewer. The conspiracy is plainly a police-hatched conspiracy, and the man is no more allied to the Nana of Bithoor than to the Nizam for anything that comes out on the trial. The account which the police make him give of himself, is simply an impossible relationship to the late Peishwa."

POONA, April 25.—The rebel Mahaden Rao bin Bajaram, whom I mentioned in my last as having been convicted of sedition by the Judge of Sholapore, and sentenced to death, has had his sentence commuted to transportation for life, and confiscation of all his property. The reason assigned by the judges for this act of mercy is that the man's crime appears to their lordships to come under Section 122 of the Penal Code rather than Section 121; an argument which requires a reference to the Act in question to make it perfectly perspicuous. But an impression seems to prevail in some quarters that the case is to a great extent fictitious, and got up by the police—that Mahadeo Rao was not an agent of the Bithoor family at all, or had anything to do with them, but that the police induced him, by arguments best known to themselves, to personate such a character, in order that they (the police) might come in for rewards and promotion for their praiseworthy and exemplary vigilance. They ought to come in for something very different, if they really did act in the manner supposed, and their prisoner in that case to be let off, because he did nothing but what the police told him, and no harm could possibly arise from such a piece of play-acting. There are two objections to the theory of the police having got up this affair. One is, that no man would be such a fool as to run his head into a noose to please the police. But to this it might be replied that they might have persuaded the fellow that it was in their power to hang him, and that they would do it—and he declared they did really threaten him in this manner. If he must be hanged in any case, he might have thought he may as well be a raja for a few months first; and again they might have promised that he should be in no real danger if he complied with their request. The other ground for supposing that the case is genuine, is that he drew a hoondie on no less a person than the well-known Honourable Mr. Juggonath Sunkersett, a member of the Legislative Council of Bombay—a firm friend, of course, of the British Government, who would be about the last man in India to give any assistance to a scheme for placing the Nana's family on the guddees of Poona; and it is declared that the police would never dream of making such a mistake. What weight there may be in this argument against the prisoner I will not determine.—Delhi Gazette.

MR. COWASJEE JEHAANGIR'S EYE HOSPITAL.—A MUNIFICENT GIFT.—"To the hon. A. D. Robertson, Secretary to Government.—Sir,—Through Dr. Peet, I had the honour to offer to Government the sum of Rs. 50,000 towards building an Eye Hospital in the compound of the Grand Medical College, and the rest to be paid by Government for its maintenance, &c. The want of such an institution is greatly felt in this rising city, and I hope my proposal will meet with the approval and concurrence of Government.—I have, &c., COWASJEE JEHAANGIR.—Bombay, March 12, 1863." "To Cowasjee Jehangir, Esq.—Sir,—I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated the 12th instant, offering to pay to Government the sum of Rs. 50,000 towards the construction of an Eye Hospital in the compound of the Grant Medical College. In reply, I am desired to convey to you the thanks of his Excellency the Governor in Council for your munificent offer, and to inform you that the measures which Government may take to give effect your liberality will hereafter be communicated to you.—I have, &c., A. D. ROBERTSON, Secretary to Government.—March 19, 1863." On the same date, Government, in forwarding a copy of Mr. Cowasjee Jehangir's letter to the principal Inspector-General, Medical Department, requested that officer to favour them with an early expression of his opinion as to the measures to be taken to give effect to Mr. Cowasjee's liberality. With his reply, dated March 31, 1863, the principal Inspector-General submitted, for the information of Government, a letter of the 28th idem from the Surgeon of the Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy Hospital, in whose views he entirely coincided; and, with reference to paragraph 5, suggested that a committee, consisting of the Surgeon of the Jamsetjee Hospital, the Civil Oculist, and the Civil Architect, might be named, for the purpose therein specified.

THE TRADE OF KURRACHEE.—The port of Kurrachee is rapidly rising in importance, mainly in consequence of the impetus given to the Indian cotton trade since the outbreak of the American war. The authorities have taken advantage of the opportunity offered by the large quantity of shipping now frequenting the port, to improve in every way the anchorage and wharf accommodation. During the month of January last, 400,000 maunds of cotton, the market value of which was Rs. 11,70,887, were exported, while in February the quantity exported amounted to 621,270 maunds, valued at Rs. 21,89,358.

TWO PARSEE MERCHANTS of Bombay, Mr. Cowasjee Maneckjee Limjee and Mr. Homjee Cursetjee Doly, have given a donation of three thousand rupees towards the charity schools in that city. Such princely munificence is by no means of rare occurrence in Bombay.

TRADE ON THE INDUS.—A tabular statement has been lately published by the Punjab Government, which exhibits in a clear manner the extent of the trade on the river Indus. From this it appears that the number of boats that went down the four rivers—Jhelum, Chenab, Sutlege, and Indus, to Sukkur, during the quarter ending January 31st, 1863, was 572. The amount of produce carried was mds. 2,73,242, and the value of the same, Rs. 31,52,286. The produce consisted chiefly of cotton, mustard, wool, spices, oil, gram, indigo, sugar, saltpetre, and rice. As compared with the corresponding period of the previous year, there has been a large increase of traffic, "the amount of produce transported being a little more than double what it then was." There has been a considerable increase in the cotton traffic also, 71,927 maunds, valued at Rs. 16,57,312, having been sent down during the period under review, "in addition to what was sent down in the corresponding quarter of last year." The fact that the "Indus trade" is every year steadily increasing cannot be disputed.—Hurkaru, May 6.

FRAUDULENT DETERIORATION OF COTTON.—From a statement of cases tried by magisterial officers in the Khandeish Zillah for the quarter ending the 31st December, 1862, being offences against the provisions of Regulation 3 of 1829, we observe that five persons were convicted and sentenced as follows:—Jewraj Rajpal, for keeping for sale fraudulently deteriorated cotton, convicted and sentenced to suffer one hour's simple imprisonment, and to pay a fine of Rs. 250. Khedidas Veljee, for a similar offence, convicted and sentenced to suffer one hour's simple imprisonment, and to pay a fine of Rs. 100. Hurchund Kissondas, for selling cotton mixed with leaves and dirt, sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50, or, in default, to suffer one month's simple imprisonment. Hurgovindjee Bhatey, for conveying by railway for sale at Bombay deteriorated cotton, sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 25, or, in default, to suffer five days' simple imprisonment. Moosa Hajee, for exposing for sale adulterated cotton, sentenced to suffer two hours' simple imprisonment, and to pay a fine of Rs. 30, or, in default, to suffer further imprisonment for seven days.

DESPATCH OF BOMBAY MAILS.—The following announcement relative to the despatch of the Overland Mails from Bombay appears in the Calcutta Gazette of April 25:—April 24, No. 2,652:—"The following extract from a despatch from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India, to the Government of Bombay, No. 9, dated the 19th ult., is published for general information:—Para. 1. I have received and communicated to her Majesty's Post-Master General your despatch of the 12th of November last, and its enclosures, containing a representation from the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, regarding the length of time occupied in the transmission of the Overland Mails from London to Bombay, and requesting that arrangements may be made with a view to accelerating communication with Europe. 2. I have now to forward a copy of the reply I have received from the Post-office authorities, dated the 2nd of March, instant, together with a letter from the Peninsular and Oriental Company, of the 23rd of February, from which you will perceive that it is proposed to delay for one day the departure of the Mail from Bombay, and to re-issue the instructions to the commanders of steam-vessels, to use all speed in making the voyage to Bombay. This plan, it is hoped, will obviate the inconvenience felt in consequence of the Mails from this country frequently arriving at Bombay too late to allow of letters being answered by the return Mail. 3. Since the above was written, I have received a communication from the Post-office, stating that the Post-Master General has approved of the proposal by the Peninsular and Oriental Company, that the alteration in the despatch of the packets from Bombay shall commence with the second Mail in April next."

DEATH OF CAPTAIN GOWAN.—I regret to inform you of the death, this afternoon, of Captain Gowan, 6th Dragoons; he was killed by a tiger at the waterfall near Mhow. Mr. Wallace, of the same corps, was with him, and destroyed the tiger after the brute had killed poor Gowan, who will be much regretted, as he was a general favourite in his regiment. This is the fourth tiger Mr. Wallace has bagged this month.—Times of India, May 14.

DEATH OF COLONEL GRIMES.—I regret to inform you that Col. G. R. Grimes expired this morning very suddenly. The disorder that proved fatal was the softening of the brain. The Colonel came here but a week ago, to succeed Brigadier Russell. He gained, as you may know, great honour during the late mutinies.—Times of India, May 14.

THE REBEL MADHOWRAO.—The Bombay papers inform us, that the High Court, sitting in appeal, have commuted the capital sentence, passed on Madhowrao, for rebellion against her Majesty, by the Session Judge of Sholapore. We take the following notice of the matter from the Times of India:—"Petition having been forwarded to the Judges of the High Court by Madhowrao bin Rajaram, who was tried for abetment of waging war against the Queen, found guilty, and sentenced on the 26th of March last by the Hon. G. A. Hobart, Session Judge of Sholapore, to be hanged and to forfeit all his property, was together with the finding of the Judge of Sholapore, which was sent up for confirmation, considered by the High Court Appellate Judges yesterday. The following is their resolution:—"The evidence discloses facts which more properly constitute the treason described in section 122 of the Penal Code, than that which is described in section 121. The Court, therefore, decline to confirm the sentence of death and forfeiture of property passed by the Session Judge under section 121, and sentence the prisoner under section 122 to transportation for life, and to forfeiture of all his property." We shall probably find something to say upon the case in a day or two. In the meantime, we state our belief that the High Court has done wisely in commuting the sentence."

CHINA.

HONG KONG, April 29.—From Tien-tsin we hear that all is quiet, the Nienfai having been driven beyond the boundary. From Hankow we learn that a body of marauders had caused much consternation among the native traders, by approaching to within ten miles of the city, after repulsing a force sent against them. Later accounts say they have retired, and that the alarm has somewhat subsided. At Kiukiang the British settlement is being rapidly improved by a "municipal council," and also by the erection of a bund, or praya, which will be not only a protection against flooding in the river, but a great facility in the landing and shipment of goods. At Shanghai matters are reported as in a favourable state. Fooshan as at length yielded to an attack by the "Anglo-Chinese" contingent under Major Gordon, and the siege of Chiang-zu has been raised. Taitsan also had surrendered, and its garrison declared for the Imperial cause. Major Gordon is said to be preparing for further operations. Affairs at Ningpo are in a bad state, owing to the licence allowed to the Franco-Chinese force in looting and oppressing the people. Shaou-shan, a city about twenty miles beyond Shaou-hsing, has been evacuated by the rebels. In Hong Kong matters go on much as usual. There have been no escapes from gaol during the past fortnight.—Overland China Mail.

CEYLON.

COLOMBO, May 16.—THE "PEARL."—After an absence of some five months the colonial steamer Pearl made her appearance in Colombo Harbour this morning: we hope in improved condition and spirits, ready to place something to the credit of the long account lately running up against her. She is very little damaged, as we learn, by her adventure at Coconada, and brings a cargo of specie and sundries. The following letter appeared in the Madras Times, and will be read with interest:—"THE STEAMER 'PEARL.'—Sir, —I have the pleasure to inform you that the steamer Pearl is now all safe at anchor in our roads. She ran aground on the night of the 9th inst., owing to a mistake of the supposed distance from the light on Hope Island and the soundings reported to Captain Donnan being ten fathoms. He considered his vessel fully eight miles from the light at the time she grounded. As soon as Captain Donnan found his vessel on shore he fired guns and burnt blue lights, in hopes of obtaining assistance, but the vessel being fully eight miles from Coconada, they were not heard nor seen. At daylight of the 10th she was seen from the master attendant's office, and the master attendant immediately proceeded to her assistance. On arriving near her he found the breakers so high that he could not board her in his boat, and several cargo boats having been ordered to follow him, he succeeded in getting on board. Finding that there was a large amount of treasure, some thirteen lacs, and a valuable cargo, he at once put the treasure in the cargo boats, and as both of the steamer's cables had parted, and the anchors lost, he landed, bringing with him Mrs. Donnan and two of her children, the youngest of which died next day at noon in his house. Having obtained anchors and cables, he proceeded again on board, and the vessel having considerably lightened, steam was got up, and she having swung round to her anchor, the screw was set to work, and the vessel got steaming way on, when the cables were slipped, in the hope that the screw would force her off on the sand, but she turned right round with her head in shore, and having no anchors nor cables left, she drove two or three hundred yards further on shore, and there lay all night at the mercy of the breakers, which struck her with great force, and, as the tide made, drove her close to the sand-bank, which is dry at low water. The master attendant again landed, and having consulted Captain Gibson, late acting master attendant, it was decided that Captain Gibson should proceed to the vessels in the roads, and try to get more anchors and cables; in the meantime the captain and the crew were landing the cargo in boats, that were able to lie alongside at low water, as the breakers were then outside of the steamer. Captain Gibson having obtained from one vessel a stream anchor of 12 cwt. and a stream chain, and a 7-inch new Europe hawser from another, also three coil hawsers, the master attendant got up steam in the small river steamer Fred and May, and proceeded to the shipping and took the boats in tow and reached the Pearl on Sunday at noon; the steamer Fred and May could not approach the steamer on account of the heavy breakers. The boats with Captain Gibson and the master attendant were let go and proceeded close to the Pearl, when Captain Gibson boarded her in the jolly boat and the master attendant remained in the anchor boat, to lay out in the best position. Finding that there were only six feet of water, and that the vessel drew seven feet six inches, it was decided to lay the stream anchor E.N.E. in nine feet, and with the assistance of the screw to force her over the sand, stern on to the stream anchor; all the stone ballast was now got out, and after three tides, viz., Sunday at 3 P.M., Monday at 3.30 A.M., and Monday at from 3.30 to 9 P.M., she was with great exertion by every one on board and the use of the screw reversed, hove into nine feet where another small anchor having been run out astern she was hauled into 3½ fathoms and there anchored, where she remained until this morning, for the purpose of recovering her anchor and cables from the boats sent to pick them up. The vessel has sustained but little damage considering the heavy sea and length of time she was on shore; the only thing carried away being her iron tiller, and some pieces of her mouldings. She will be surveyed to-morrow, and if no damage be found will take in her cargo and proceed to Colombo, touching at Madras. It is not for me to give praise, but from the moment that Captain Donnan and myself decided to heave her over the sand bank stern foremost every man on board turned to with a will and worked night and day until she was in safety. Yours faithfully, W. GIBSON.—Coconada, 15th April, 1863."

DEATH OF CAPTAIN LANE, H.M.'s 50TH REGIMENT.—The very sudden death of this much-esteemed officer, which took place on Tuesday afternoon, has fallen like a thunderbolt on our small community. Only a few days back the deceased looked quite that type of robust health and good spirits he was always famed for; and seemed one destined, in the ordinary course of nature, to possess a more than average lease of life. But such is death—and, thus unexpectedly has this gallant and eminently popular soldier and gentleman been snatched away from the bosom of his family,—the society of his brother officers, and that of numerous other friends and acquaintances. His remains were interred yesterday morning in Galle Face burial-ground, with every mark of respect, military and otherwise. The following regimental order has been issued by Colonel Waddy:—Colombo, 5th May, 1863.—Regimental After Order.—It is with much regret the Commanding Officer announces to the officers and men of the regiment the death of Captain A. J. Lane, which melancholy event took place this day in his quarters at half-past one o'clock P.M. The funeral of the late Captain Lane will take place at a quarter to six A.M. to-morrow, when procession will be ready formed to march off—one company made up to fifty rank and file under command of Captain Bunbury will form the firing party; and all the other men off duty will parade on side arm. Officers will wear black crape on the left arm for one month from this date, as a mark of respect for their late brother officer.—By order.—(Signed) Arthur Hunt, Lieutenant and Acting Adjutant 50th Regiment.

SALE OF CROWN LANDS IN THE SOUTHERN PROVINCE.—We learn from Matura that forty-three allotments of land situated in the Gangeboddoo Paitoo, containing from two to three acres each, were sold for £1,279, or at the average rate of £14. 10s. per acre. These lands were all purchased by the native population, to whom great facilities are now given for acquiring lands in small holdings. We believe that if this system were adopted in all our provinces, extensive tracts of land would find ready purchasers:—

1 lot	14	£32 11 0	£35 0 0
1 "	24	26 6 0	60 0 0
7 "	15	22 10 0	331 0 0
6 "	144	14 10 0	212 10 0
28 "	55	From £10 to £3	640 10 0
43 lots 87½ acres			Total £1,279 0 0

SCINDE RAILWAY.—It appears that the traffic receipts on this company's line for the week ending April 19 amounted to £2,474, against £895 for the corresponding week of 1862, showing an increase of £1,579.

COTTON FROM INDIA.—By the advices received by the last Indian mail, it appears there are afloat forty ships, all laden with cotton, bound to Liverpool, viz.: Hyacinth, with 1,462 bales; Palinurus, 4,812; Delhi, 4,449; Morning Star, 2,148; Harmonides, 6,310; Cimber, 4,433; Fort William, 2,710; Queen of England, 3,377; Shakespeare, 2,974; Uncas, 5,945; Trenton, 4,218; Resolute, 4,749; City of Delhi, 3,468; Natolia, 4,800; Bosphorus, 6,224; Tasmania, 4,765; Mornington, 3,476; Zambia, 4,208; Moreno, 2,729; Greyhound, 5,124; Brunette, 4,168; Jamsetjee Cursetjee, 2,645; Queen of the Seas, 5,925; Arundel, 5,851; City of Agra, 5,003; Dawn of Hope, 5,512; Adriatic, 4,176; Magnolia, 2,820; King of Algeria, 6,032; Concordia, 4,585; Herald, 5,147; Algiers, 4,999; Cambay, 3,356; Tomogonos, 3,502; James Russell, 3,338; Vittoria, 2,481; Dalhousie, 4,214; Coronet, 3,007; Frenchman, 4,158; and Anna Dorothea, 3,210; making a total of 166,529 bales of cotton at sea en route to Liverpool from Bombay. There is also at sea four ships bound to London—the Daniel Rankin, Walmer Castle, Caroline Agnes, and Hornet, with 4,711 bales of cotton on board. To the outports and the Continent there are ten ships afloat, with 23,484 bales of cotton on board.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

COLONEL CRAWLEY AND THE LATE SERGEANT-MAJOR LILLEY.

IN our last number we copied from the Times of the 4th instant the Memorandum on this affair, said to have been issued from the Horse-guards. The Times two days after issued what it called "an authentic copy" of the same document, giving no explanation respecting the un-authenticity of the first copy. This second copy is much longer than the first one, and differs considerably in the wording of some of the paragraphs. As the Duke of Cambridge's decision in this case is a matter of some importance in the military history of our day, we have thought it right to make room for the later and fuller edition. Whoever supplied the first copy to the Times was guilty of both impudence and dishonesty in passing off upon the editor and the public so imperfect a version, leaving it to be understood that it was a veritable and verbatim copy of the original; unless, indeed, the blame lies further off, and he copied it from some Indian paper, supposing it to be genuine. The variations, however, between the first copy and the second of the Duke of Cambridge's Memorandum are not such as lead us to alter in any material degree the opinions we have already expressed on this most painful business, though if we had seen the second copy before the first we might have spoken in somewhat stronger and more decisive terms of the inconsistency and impropriety of the highest military authority permitting a colonel to remain in charge of a regiment after he is admitted to have received it "in the highest state of discipline," to have brought it into a state of internal strife and anarchy, to have proved himself to be "an officer not gifted with the special talent which unites with firmness of command the tact which inspires confidence and creates good-will"—to have addressed the regiment in a manner, "to say the least of it, exceedingly reprehensible and injudicious," and to have erred on other points to an extent that "his Royal Highness cannot speak of in too strong terms."

This unfortunate affair was the subject of an animated discussion in the House of Commons on the evening of the 5th instant. Mr. Fortescue called attention to the circumstances of Sergeant-major Lilley's death. It was too late, he said, to offer reparation to Sergeant Lilley, but it was not too late to punish the man who was the cause of his sufferings; and Mr. Fortescue expressed his astonishment at the strange leniency which had been exhibited towards Colonel Crawley in permitting him to remain in command of the regiment. By one of the Articles of War any officer who detains a prisoner beyond eight days in arrest without bringing him to trial is liable to be cashiered. Poor Lilley was confined not for eight days only, but for twenty-eight, and was at last released by death only, without any formal charge having been brought against him. The death of this brave and honest soldier was in a great measure caused by the indignities he suffered—by his being treated like a felon—by the brutal cruelty of his commanding officer in posting a sentry in the bed-room within a foot of the bed of his unhappy wife, then dying of consumption. Colonel Crawley added to his misconduct in these respects by meanly attempting to rescue himself from the odium of it by attributing the indecent and inhuman introduction of the sentry into a married man's bed-room, night and day, to an entire misapprehension of his orders on the part of his adjutant, Lieutenant Fitzsimon, and by a most ungenerous endeavour to make the sergeant-majors death appear the result of drunken excesses. Thus Colonel Crawley, to lessen the weight of the evidence of the three sergeant-majors, as to his absence at muster parades, put them under arrest, and treated them as criminals. To get rid of the adjutant's testimony on the same point, he falsely represented him (a capital shot at 600 yards) to be so blind that he could not be sure of the identity of a person at the distance of five yards; and to show that he did not cause poor Lilley's death, he tried to prove that one of the soberest men in the army was a sot, and had died of too much drink.*

The Marquis of Hartington, Under Secretary of War, did not attempt to justify the conduct of Colonel Crawley, but he explained that the colonel had contrived to shelter himself in some degree by obtaining the consent or sanction of Major-general Farrell, the Brigadier, and Sir William Mansfield, the Commander-in-Chief, both of whom must have been misled by Colonel Crawley's one-sided statement of the case. Neither General Farrell nor Sir William Mansfield, however, can wholly justify his own conduct in the matter. These officers trusted too much to Colonel Crawley's representation of matters in which his own passions and interests were involved. It is true that Sir William Mansfield and General Farrell did not expect that the court-martial would have been so much prolonged. But assuredly they ought to have made more inquiries upon the subject before they sanctioned the arrest. Unhappily their mistake, in the opinion of the Government, to a certain extent covers Colonel Crawley.

* Lieutenant Fitzsimon in his letter denied Colonel Crawley's assertions in these words:—"I respectfully beg to state that I simply carried out the orders of my commanding officer in all that I did in this matter. I was ordered in the first instance to place Sergeant-majors Lilley, Wakefield, and Duval in close arrest, which I did; and had sentries posted outside the doors of their quarters. Some time after Lieutenant-colonel Crawley, in the Orderly-room, said that persons held correspondence with the prisoners, and told me to place the sentries inside, with strict orders that they were not to let the prisoners out of their sight night or day. When I received the above order several persons were present, one of whom remarked that Regimental Sergeant-major Lilley was a married man. Lieutenant-colonel Crawley said he did not care; and distinctly gave the order to place the sentries so that they should not lose sight of the prisoners night or day. The officers who were present in the Orderly-room can doubtless remember the circumstance."

The Government has granted to the surviving relatives of poor Lilley a sum equal to a sergeant-major's pension. The announcement of this marvellous munificence was received in the House with "ironical cheers." It was felt to be but a poor compensation, indeed, for so heavy a loss—but a poor redress for wrongs that ended in something, too like manslaughter. The conversation in the House soon dropped, but the matter will not be soon dropped outside. It will not be allowed to rest until the chief criminal has had something more to bear than mere words of condemnation from his highest official superior. He who cannot command his own passions is unfit to rule others. A man who has acted as Colonel Crawley is said to have done is surely unworthy to hold her Majesty's commission. The public cannot but feel that, in spite of the desire on the part of the Duke of Cambridge to check the misconduct of officers, there is even in His Royal Highness, as in all others connected with "the powers that be," a desire to support, as far as possible, all persons in authority, and to deal gently with them when they are in error. It cannot be concealed that Colonel Crawley's offences are vastly heavier than the offence of the indiscreet Captain Smales, who wrote a disrespectful yet not untruthful letter to his superior officer. But how different has been the treatment which these two offenders have met with. How comparatively light and lenient, in proportion to Captain Smales' offence, has been the punishment of the chief offender, Colonel Crawley, who, if the charges against him be true, has been guilty not only of acts of cruelty and injustice, but of the meanest falsehoods.

THE FEVER PLAGUE IN HOOGHLY AND BARASET.

ONE of the most painfully interesting official Reports that we have read for many years is that of Dr. Elliott to the Government of Bengal on the subject of his late tour of inspection in the districts of Hooghly and Baraset. Both districts were in a most calamitous condition. In Hooghly alone he found about four score villages more or less affected by a dreadful epidemic fever, known, we believe, by the natives by the name of "Jur Beekar," though Dr. Elliott has not yet attached to it any distinctive appellation. It raged furiously in the districts alluded to during the last two rainy seasons, and Dr. Elliott has earnestly warned the Government that, if immediate measures are not taken to check the scourge, it will break out again with increased virulence during the next rains. It has already half depopulated extensive villages, which now present wretched scenes of tenantless mud huts and houses built of sun-baked brick with mud for mortar, the walls half-buried in jungle, and in various stages of dilapidation and ruin. The ignorant and apathetic villagers make no voluntary efforts to resist the evil. They take their fate as it comes. Not that they are indifferent to the domestic afflictions which accompany the evils of pain, and sickness, and death, but that they are quite unprepared to struggle manfully against a great evil, and care not to solicit advice or aid from the Government itself, or any of their more intelligent European friends and fellow-subjects. Sixty per cent. of the native population of the districts of Hooghly and Baraset have been the victims of this horrible pestilence, which usually carries off the sufferer in a few hours, and leaves even those who escape death, in a state that makes life itself a curse. They are described as miserable wrecks of human beings, with dim eyes, and hollow cheeks, and fleshless limbs, and jaundiced complexion, still suffering from constant fever, and diarrhoea or dysentery, and enormous enlargements of the spleen and liver. They are hopeless and helpless. They have no chance of recovery unless they are removed at once to a new locality of a healthier character.

The causes of this great affliction are very easily explained—filth and thick jungle, in combination with heat and moisture. These causes would not long be allowed to operate so fatally upon an energetic and intelligent community. But the natives of India seem to be quite unconscious of the importance of air, and light, and cleanliness, as the essential elements of all wholesome human vitality; and this is the more remarkable because no people in the world have suffered so much from the absence of these elements of health, or are so imperatively called upon by their religion to regard cleanliness as a virtue, and to look upon personal contact with physical impurity as both a calamity and a crime. They are, indeed, scrupulous enough on points connected with their religion. If a fellow-countryman of a lower caste, or a Feringhee, or foreigner, come within a certain distance of them while cooking their food, they throw away at once both the cooking utensils and their contents as wholly unfit for further use; and they bathe themselves at fixed hours with great punctuality; but they care not how dirty the food is, nor how filthy the water. They may be seen bathing in the Hooghly, and drinking the water of it, within a few feet of the dead body of a man or dog, in an advanced stage of decomposition—an object of sight and smell, perfectly overpowering to a European. Their small tanks are frightfully foul and discoloured, and in the rains almost every hut has some small stagnant piece of green and greasy water by its side in the hollow spot whence the earth of its walls was taken. Those walls are, in many cases, almost hidden in trees and thick jungle. These little wretched dwellings are disgustingly dirty, and ill-ventilated and over-crowded, and the atmosphere of them is often so foul and poisonous that Dr. Elliott declares that, in some cases, he was unable to remain within the walls "even for a short space of time." The wealthier inhabitants of the districts of Hooghly and Baraset are just as indifferent to filth, and bad air and horrible odours as the poorest and most ignorant villagers in their neighbourhood, and they are also just as idle and apathetic under the affliction which has overtaken all classes; and they have hitherto done nothing whatever to assist themselves or others. The British Indian Association of Calcutta has, indeed, appealed to Government upon the subject, but has made no offers of co-operation in the prosecution of any sanitary scheme for the benefit of their unhappy countrymen. We are not sorry to perceive unmistakable indications that the Government is roused to indignation, and the authorities do not hesitate to say that it is requisite, in the face of such a terrible visitation, to apply a certain amount of compulsion to people who will not help themselves, when their neglect may extend the evil to others. If this fever plague is not stopped there is every reason to expect that it will pass on to Barrackpore and Calcutta, and eventually, perhaps, spread itself all over Bengal. The Lieut.-governor is willing, he says, to co-operate with private generosity in an organised system of pecuniary relief. His Honor is willing to advance Rs. 40,000 for this purpose, and to lend the services of Government officers to further and guide the efforts of the people. But he expects wealthy natives to help him, and he reminds the British Indian Association that they have rich and influential members amongst them, and some of them even have estates in the afflicted districts; and he hints at the uselessness of talkee talkee, the characteristic national weakness of the Bengalee. "What is wanted," he says, "is immediate action and not discussion." He goes even further, and is resolved, he says, that if the rich men in the fever-haunted districts will not remove the jungle and filth, and fill up small stagnant pools on their own grounds, that he will direct his officers to act against them under the Criminal Procedure Code, which provides for the removal of public nuisances. This is prompt, judicious, and just. The evil must be stopped at once. This is no time for dilatory, circumlocutory, formal, red-tape proceedings. But, in addition to the direction of immediate action to the immediate evil, the Government ought to attend, not to the danger of the present hour only, or to the state of one or two districts of Bengal, but to the future interest and safety of all India, for there is no knowing how widely this or some similar epidemic may spread, and how much more fatal a character it may assume if timely measures are not adopted to save the whole country from a greater calamity than has ever yet befallen it. Some stringent laws ought to be prepared and passed by the Legislative Council for securing at fixed periods the thorough clearance of the low jungle, and the filling up of small ponds of poisonous water in the immediate neighbourhood of all native towns and villages. It is a marvel, indeed, that Bengal has not been visited periodically by the worst forms of plague, when we consider the heat and moisture of the atmosphere, the close jungle, the rank putrescent vegetation of all sorts, the vast number of stagnant, fetid, green-mantled pools, that are seen in all directions, and the accumulated filth of undrained villages, the over-crowded population, and the peculiarly uncleanly habits of the natives.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—JUNE 5.

THE CASE OF SERGEANT-MAJOR LILLEY.

Mr. FORTESCUE rose to call attention to the circumstances attending the death, after four weeks' imprisonment, of Regimental Sergeant-major Lilley, of the 6th Dragoons, at Mhow, in India, on the 25th of May, 1862; and to the imprisonment at the same time, for a still longer period, of Troop Sergeant-majors Duval and Wakefield, of the same regiment, without either of the three having been brought to trial, or any formal charge having been preferred against them; and to ask whether the commanding officer under whose authority those things took place, was still to be left in command of the regiment. The hon. member at the outset disclaimed all intention of making an attack upon his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief, whose abilities and character he held in the highest respect. He was quite sure that if the action of his Royal Highness had not been in the first instance interfered with by the strange course taken by the high military authorities in India, not a day would have been lost in insuring that ample justice was done. The hon. member then recapitulated the well known history of the case: the irregular arrest of the three sergeants by order of the commanding officer of the regiment (Colonel Crawley), on the eve of their appearance as witnesses at a court-martial which was being held on the commanding officer, in consequence of charges brought against him by Captain Smale, the paymaster of the regiment; their being kept in most rigorous confinement, without—as had been admitted by his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief—a shadow of evidence being brought forward against them, a confinement from which one of them—Sergeant-major Lilley—was only released by death, and another to find himself lodged in an asylum as a raving lunatic. On the death of Lilley no inquest was held, but the regimental surgeon reported that his death was caused by apoplexy, induced by the painful circumstances in which he was placed. The hon. member then described the place where the sergeant was confined, and narrated all the circumstances attending the death of his wife, which have long since been in possession of the public. It was too late to offer reparation to Sergeant Lilley, for the poor fellow was dead; but it was not too late to punish the man who had been the cause of his sufferings—(loud cries of "Hear, hear"). The hon. member next adverted to the memorandum recently published by his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief, and expressed his astonishment at the strange leniency which had been exhibited towards Colonel Crawley in permitting him to remain in command of the regiment. In conclusion, he stated that it was the fixed intention of the relatives of Sergeant Lilley to indict Colonel Crawley for manslaughter in case that officer ever put his foot in England.

Mr. CONINGHAM said that, although the question of Colonel Crawley's conduct had been already within the last few days under the consideration of the House, the memorandum just issued by his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief completely altered the aspect of the case. The Horse Guards, by condoning the conduct of Colonel Crawley, had made themselves responsible for that conduct; and he sincerely trusted that the full weight of the indignation of that House would be directed against the course taken by his Royal Highness. Having quoted portions of the memorandum of his Royal Highness, the honourable member proceeded to say that if his Royal Highness could issue such a memorandum, he was not fit to be in command of the British army; for if anything could tend to sap the high spirit which animated our soldiers, it was to see conduct such as that of Colonel Crawley remaining uncondemned by the heads of the army. He trusted, therefore, that when the noble marquis rose to make his reply he would address himself not merely to the justification of Colonel Crawley, but likewise to the justification of his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief.

The Marquis of HARTINGTON having explained that the delay which had taken place in connection with the ordnance survey of Scotland was occasioned by the difficulties attending the survey of the mountainous districts, addressed himself to the case of Sergeant-Major Lilley, and explained that the arrests of the three sergeants had been ordered by Colonel Crawley on a charge of conspiracy against himself. It could not be denied, however, that their examination previous to arrest had been most irregularly conducted. When they were arrested, Colonel Crawley informed the major-general in charge of the Mhow district, requesting instructions as to bringing them to trial, and requesting also his sanction for placing them under close arrest. With regard to the placing the sergeant-majors under close arrest, it was added that Colonel Crawley had been instructed that, pending the investigation, the arrest should be close. On the 28th of April Sir William Mansfield wrote that the evidence did not appear to substantiate the charges against the sergeant-majors. That opinion was chiefly grounded upon the fact that the sergeant-majors had not been warned before their examination that their evidence might be used against them. He went on to say, however, that their conduct had clearly been highly improper, and that Sergeant-major Lilley ought to be dismissed, and he directed that the latter should be kept in close arrest until the end of the court-martial. Shortly afterwards, at the beginning of May, the court-martial had been unexpectedly adjourned in consequence of the illness of the paymaster, Captain Smale. The sergeant-majors were kept in close arrest during the interval. On 24th May Sergeant-major Lilley was reported sick, and on the 25th he died—(hear). On the 2nd June Sir W. Mansfield wrote to General Farrell that he had heard, through the public papers, of the death of Sergeant-major Lilley, but that he thought the court-martial would have been terminated shortly after the arrival of the order to keep him in close arrest arrived at Mhow, and expressing his surprise that he had not been communicated with by telegraph to obtain a release from the arrest. The memorandum also stated the regret he experienced at the death of Lilley, and his reasons for continuing the close arrest, namely: 1st, That the sergeant-majors had narrowly escaped (if they had escaped) the commission of a great crime, and it was necessary to keep them out of temptation—(oh, oh); 2nd, That there might be no tampering with the witnesses; and 3rd, that it was necessary the charge brought against them by Colonel Crawley should not be condoned by the release of the prisoners until it had been discovered what evidence there was forthcoming. Such were the facts of the unfortunate occurrence—"Unfortunate!" and "Hear, hear"). The opinion of the Judge Advocate-General upon them was that Colonel Crawley had not sufficient evidence before him of the charges brought against the sergeant-majors, that the arrests were illegal, and the reasons alleged by Sir W. Mansfield were not valid—(hear, hear). It was clear that some persons were to blame—(hear, hear). The question was, how the blame was to be distributed. Sir W. Mansfield evidently thought he was simply acting as a police magistrate would have done in remanding a prisoner; and Colonel Crawley felt himself justified by the order of his superior officer. It was not to be forgotten that, in dealing with officers of their distinction and service, great caution and delicacy required to be observed by his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief; but a claim having been made by the relatives of the sergeant-major, who were persons in poor circumstances, who had been dependant upon him, the Government thought it right to award an allowance of about the same amount as would have been payable had Sergeant-Major Lilley been discharged instead of having died—"Oh, oh"). It was to be borne in mind that all the collateral circumstances had not yet become thoroughly known, and the account of Lieutenant Fitz Symons, who had just arrived, contradicted several of the important particulars in the charges against Colonel Crawley. He did not doubt that to many persons it would have been more satisfactory if a victim could have been produced for punishment. That was not so; but full inquiry would be made into those collateral circumstances which would alone criminate the officers. Great as had been the pain and disgust caused by that story of scandal and mismanagement, the Secretary for War must not allow himself for a moment to be diverted one hair's breadth from the strict rule of military justice.

Mr. Alderman SIDNEY thought the explanation of the noble marquis would be very unsatisfactory and that had the parties implicated been ordinary civilians a very different course would have been pursued. When such men as Colonel Crawley were retained in command for only the strange reason that they enjoyed the confidence of their Commander-in-Chief, it showed a negligence of the lives and liberties of men which would tend to endanger the confidence of the whole army—(hear, hear). The noble lord had not said a word about the gross indecency that had been shown in the treatment of Lilley's wife—(hear).

Colonel BARTLELOT defended Colonel Crawley, who he said was ready and anxious to come forward with full explanations.

Mr. PROCTOR did not think the noble lord could be censured for any want of tenderness in his treatment of the officers in question. The subject was one of the greatest importance, and the investigation ought not to cease until the really responsible parties were discovered—(hear, hear).

Captain ARCHDALL said that, as there was to be further inquiry, he would merely express his gratification with the vindication of the regiment pronounced by the Commander-in-Chief.

Mr. HEADLAM said it was clear that Colonel Crawley was protected by the order of his superior officer; and, therefore, he could not be removed from his command on that ground.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—JUNE 9. THE TELEGRAPHIC CABLE BETWEEN MALTA AND ALEXANDRIA.

Sir W. GAILWEY asked the Secretary to the Treasury if he would lay upon the table of the house a return of all monies voted by Parliament or contributed from the Indian Government for making, transporting from this country, and laying the cable now working between Malta and Alexandria, with a detail of all payments made to Messrs. Glass and Elliott relative to this cable previous to its being opened to the public; also a copy of the lease to Messrs. Glass and Elliott, by whom this line is worked, with the gross receipts since such lease was granted.

Mr. F. PEEL said there would be no objection to giving these returns. There was no vote for the line except a small sum of £200, the salary of the officer employed on the part of the Government to check the contractors.

THE CASE OF SERGEANT MAJOR LILLEY.

The following is an authentic copy of the memorandum of his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief on this most painful case:—

"Horse Guards, S.W., Dec. 18, 1862.

MEMORANDUM.

"His Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief having perused the proceedings of the general court-martial on Paymaster Smales, of the 6th Inniskilling Dragoons, and having had under his consideration not only these proceedings, but also many facts bearing on them, has seldom found himself in a more painful position, or one in which it appears more difficult to deal out even-handed justice to all parties who have become mixed up with these unfortunate events, and at the same time to do justice to the service.

"Not only is the reputation of one of the most highly distinguished regiments in her Majesty's cavalry service implicated by them, but they have taken such a course that his Royal Highness is most unwillingly forced into the position of differing to a great degree from the views which appear to be taken by officers of high rank, great reputation, and usually of excellent judgment, to differ with whom he feels it to be not only painful to himself, but in some degree embarrassing to the service.

"His Royal Highness has, however, but one course to pursue, and that is, after mature consideration, and a patient hearing of the opinions of those who, from their rank and position, are most likely to give unbiassed advice, to act upon his own sense of justice to all parties, and with due regard to the interests of the service over which he is called to preside.

"In the mind of his Royal Highness there can be no doubt that the Court have come to a proper verdict as regards the insubordinate tone of the letter written by Paymaster Smales to his commanding officer; and it would have been quite sufficient for the purposes of discipline, and have saved a great mass of evidence and extraneous matter, had the charges been directed solely against the tone and spirit of that letter, and the letter itself been laid before the Court as the only evidence required; in which opinion his Royal Highness finds himself fortified by that of the Judge Advocate-general of her Majesty's Forces, herewith annexed.

"With regard, therefore, to Paymaster Smales—without entering into the minute points which the prosecutor has brought evidence, with more or less success, to rebut—there can be no doubt, upon the broad principles of discipline, that that officer was guilty of most insubordinate conduct in writing such letter, and his removal from the army is an act of justice to the service.

"Unfortunately, however, in bringing down on his own head a just retribution for his contumacy in writing an insubordinate letter, this trial of Paymaster Smales has exposed a state of things in the Inniskilling Dragoons which his Royal Highness will endeavour to take an impartial view of.

"There is no doubt that the Inniskilling Dragoons under Colonel White and his successor, Colonel Shute—two distinguished officers, in whom his Royal Highness has great confidence—before their embarkation for India, were all that could be desired as to esprit de corps, unanimity, and good feeling among the officers, and as to drill and discipline among the men.

"On their embarkation for India some changes took place among the officers, and the regiment had not been long in India when some unfavourable reports of the behaviour of one or two individuals when off duty, or at the mess, called down his Royal Highness's severe displeasure, the more so that it formed so strong a contrast to the previously acquired reputation of the corps.

"Still, with such exception, the regiment remained in the highest state of discipline, as elicited from all the confidential reports that have reached his Royal Highness from the Commander-in-Chief and inspecting general officers in Bombay, till Colonel Shute was succeeded by Lieutenant-colonel Crawley from another corps.

"In permitting Lieutenant-colonel Crawley to succeed Colonel Shute, his Royal Highness believed he placed—and he did, in fact, place—at the head of the Inniskillings an officer of experience in the lower ranks of the service, of considerable talent, knowledge, and zeal; but, unfortunately, as has been proved, an officer not gifted with the special talent which unites with the firmness of command the tact which inspires confidence and creates good-will.

"From the first Lieutenant-colonel Crawley appears to have taken an unfavourable view of some points in the regiment, and to have expressed himself in no measured terms as to the changes he contemplated, which his Royal Highness cannot but think was uncalled for and unnecessary, and which was sure to create an unfavourable feeling on the part of the regiment.

"The conduct of Lieutenant-colonel Crawley subsequent to the court-martial, if the address he made to his regiment, both officers and men, be correctly reported, was, to say the least of it, exceedingly reprehensible and injudicious.

"There are other points in Lieutenant-colonel Crawley's conduct of which his Royal Highness cannot speak in too strong terms.

"His Royal Highness alludes to the confinement, under arrest, of certain non-commissioned officers during the trial, under a charge of conspiracy, which was never attempted to be proved against them, and for which there seems not to have been a shadow of foundation.

"His Royal Highness has also reason to believe that had the Commander-in-Chief in India been better acquainted with some of the facts of Sergeant-major Lilley's case, he would have taken a different view of it from that which his remarks prove him to have done, and would not have attributed the death of that unfortunate non-commissioned officer to excess.

"Under these circumstances, nothing but the high opinion expressed of Lieutenant-colonel Crawley by the general officers in immediate command has induced his Royal Highness to continue him at the head of the regiment, and he does so only upon trial, and under the hope that for the future he will be able to carry on discipline without outraging the feelings of the gentlemen under his command.

"With reference to Major Swindley, his Royal Highness considers his conduct to have been most reprehensible, and he finds it difficult to make any excuse for it.

"The tone and manner in which his evidence was given were highly unbecoming, and if his Royal Highness had not been obliged to make the remarks he has done on Lieutenant-colonel Crawley he would at once remove Major Swindley from the regiment; but, as he has given Lieutenant-colonel Crawley the benefit of the character he has received from the general officers under whom he is serving, his Royal Highness will also give Major Swindley the advantage of the reports he has previously heard in his favour.

"His Royal Highness now warns both Lieutenant-colonel Crawley and Major Swindley that unless they hereafter conduct themselves in their relative positions in a manner to set an example of discipline to the regiment generally, he will feel it his duty to remove one or both of them from the important stations they occupy.

"His Royal Highness feels it to be his duty not to pass unnoticed the conduct of Captain Weir and Surgeon Turnbull.

"Nothing can excuse a subordinate officer for showing, by manner or act, disapprobation of his commanding officer before the younger members of a corps, who should look up to the captains and officers of station and experience as examples of discipline and obedience.

"In conclusion, his Royal Highness trusts that the future conduct of the officers of the Inniskillings will be such as to eradicate the evil spirit which momentarily appears to have crept into the corps, and to have tarnished a reputation which was second to none in the cavalry for all that constitutes a well-ordered and most efficient regiment.

"J. YORKE SCARLETT, A.G."

MISCELLANEOUS.

ROMANCE OF REAL LIFE.—AN OLD INDIAN GENERAL.—The Civil Tribunal of the Seine gave judgment in an action brought by the heirs of Pierre Loustaunau, formerly generalissimo of the armies of the Mahrattas in the East Indies, against the representatives of M. Lépine, jeweller to Napoleon I., to recover the sum of 600,000*fr.*, the value of a ruby which General Loustaunau had intrusted for sale to M. Lépine. The plaintiffs also demanded damages to the amount of 200,000*fr.* In opening the case, the counsel for the plaintiffs gave a long account of the adventures of Pierre Loustaunau, who was a native of a village at the foot of the Pyrenees, which he left when quite a young man, in 1777, during the excitement caused by the American War of Independence, with the intention of seeking his fortune in America. Not being able, however, to find a vessel for that destination, he took his passage to the East Indies, on board a ship carrying an envoy from the King of France, charged to conclude, with an East Indian potentate, an offensive and defensive alliance against the English, and landed at a port in the Mahratta territory, not far from Bombay. The Emperor of the Mahrattas had just been assassinated, and two princes disputed the throne, one of whom was supported by the French and the other by the English. Loustaunau immediately determined to join the former, and obtained a letter of recommendation from the French envoy. His offered services were declined on account of his youth. He then determined to serve as a volunteer, and in the course of the war he distinguished himself so much as to be intrusted with the command of a detachment, at the head of which he gained an advantage over the English, for which the Prince rewarded him with a horse richly caparisoned and a sum of 5,000 rupees. He afterwards obtained a high command, and greatly contributed to the successful issue of an important battle, during which he lost his left hand. He had a silver hand made to replace it, and the very first time he appeared at the head of his troops with this new hand, an Indian priest, falling on his knees before him, declared that the will of fate was accomplished, for that an ancient prophecy had declared that the Mahratta Empire would attain the highest degree of power when its armies should be commanded by a stranger from the far west with an invincible silver hand. From that time Loustaunau was regarded as the first subject in the empire, and became generalissimo. He held that high post for eighteen years, during which he amassed immense riches. The love of his native land, however, was still strong within him, and he resolved to return home. He accordingly transmitted his fortune, amounting to about 8,000,000*fr.*, to France through a merchant of Chandernagore, and soon after took his departure, receiving as a farewell gift from the prince the very ruby for the recovery of which the present proceedings were instituted. On leaving India his good fortune abandoned him, for, after narrowly escaping shipwreck, he arrived in France to find that his eight millions, which had been converted into assignats, were then worth only 220,000*fr.* With this remnant he bought some ironworks near the Spanish frontier, but his establishment was destroyed, in 1808, by Spanish guerillas. He then came to Paris to sell his gems, and entrusted the ruby in question to M. Lépine. On his return to the Pyrenees he was captured by some Spanish partisans and detained for a long time a prisoner in a small island of the Mediterranean, from which he at last escaped by swimming to a passing vessel, bound for the Levant. He landed in Syria, and there became insane, and was kindly treated by a wealthy merchant. He soon recovered his senses, but when he related his history all who heard it thought him as mad as ever. He wrote to France, however, and was soon joined by his son, and both of them were introduced to Lady Esther Stanhope, who, being addicted to astrology, took a liking to them, because she thought there was some mysterious connection between her star and Loustaunau's. The young man died two years before Lady Stanhope, and at her death General Loustaunau was received into a French charitable establishment, where he remained till his decease. His representatives are now in the depth of poverty, and reclaim the deposit made by their ancestor. The counsel for the defendants admitted that the ruby had been intrusted to Lépine, but declared that when estimated by competent judges it was found to be worth only 6,000*fr.*, at which price it had been purchased as a present for the Empress Josephine, and the proceeds had been paid either to Loustaunau himself or his creditors. Even had it not been so, the plaintiff's claim could not be maintained, as it was barred by the statute of limitations. The tribunal took this view of the case and rejected the plaintiff's demand.—Galignani's Messenger.

THE LEVEE.—The following were among the presentations to the Prince of Wales on behalf of the Queen at the levee held by command of her Majesty on Monday last:—Lieut. col. T. Biggs, on return from India, by Col. C. Bingham; Major-gen. R. Budd, by Earl de Grey and Ripon; Major E. Campbell, by Earl de Grey and Ripon; Capt. J. H. Castell, on return from India, by Earl de Grey and Ripon; Lieut. J. C. Dann, V.C., on receiving the Victoria Cross, by Earl de Grey and Ripon; Capt. T. Dennehy, by Earl de Grey and Ripon; Capt. H. Fraser, on return from India, by Earl de Grey and Ripon; Capt. C. E. Naylor, on return from India, by Earl de Grey and Ripon; Capt. W. H. Newcome, on return from India, by Earl de Grey and Ripon; Capt. F. R. Pollock, Deputy Commissioner Punjab, by his father, Sir F. Pollock; Capt. G. A. Prendergast, by Earl de Grey and Ripon. The Right Hon. Sir Charles Wood was prevented attending the levee, and the gentlemen who were to have been presented by the Secretary of State for India were presented by Earl de Grey and Ripon.

EAST INDIA COMPANY.—A general court of proprietors was held on Wednesday, at the office of the Company in Lothbury, Colonel Sykes, M.P., in the chair. The secretary read the financial statement, showing that the state of the security fund on June 1, 1863, was as follows:—Invested in Three per Cent. Consols, £756,420. 2s. 3d.; ditto in Three per Cent. Reduced, £4,910,936. 18s. 7d.; total, £5,673,357. 0s. 7d. The general investments were in the Three per Cents., £10,422. 17s. 9d.; in Exchequer Bills, £4,000. On the motion of Mr. Beddome, a petition to both Houses of Parliament, on the subject of the Indian navy, was adopted; that to the House of Lords to be presented by Lord Ellenborough, and to the House of Commons by Colonel Sykes.

THE LATE GUILDHALL ENTERTAINMENT.—The City Committee effected an Insurance in the "Royal Insurance Company" for £50,000 on the building, new erections, fittings and furniture, &c., of Guildhall for the space of six weeks, to cover the period during which the hazards of the preparations and festivities are in existence. By this means the City avoids all the special risks necessarily attendant on the festive occasion in question.

MR. EPHRAIM MOSELY'S IMPROVEMENT in the CONSTRUCTION of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, and PALATES, on an INDIA-RUBBER BASE, are secured by Letters Patent, dated December, 1852, whereby the continual outlay of new teeth is avoided, alterations from the absorption of the gums, or any other cause, being easily remedied, and the first outlay no greater than for ordinary kinds. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted as under:—It consists of one continuous piece of Prepared India-rubber. The Artificial Teeth present an uniformly even surface to the action of the tongue, preventing lodgment of food and all secretions, so much complained of in the present system. No gold or any other metal being required, all springs, wires, and fastenings are wholly unnecessary; sharp edges are avoided, a greatly increased freedom of suction is supplied, a natural elasticity hitherto wholly unattainable, and a fit perfected with the most unerring accuracy, are secured; while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums. The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the prepared india-rubber; and, as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may be retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being at the same time provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation.

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!!

C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Morland, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches, with prices, free by post.

GROSSE & BLACKWELL, Parveyors to the Queen, SOHO-SQUARE, LONDON.

MR. HOWARD, Surgeon-Dentist, 52, Fleet-street, has introduced an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed without springs, wires, or ligatures. They so perfectly resemble the natural teeth as not to be distinguished from the originals by the closest observer. They will never change colour or decay, and will be found superior to any teeth ever before used. This method does not require the extraction of roots, or any painful operation, will support and preserve teeth that are loose, and is guaranteed to restore articulation and mastication. Decayed teeth stopped, and rendered sound and useful in mastication. 52, Fleet-street. At home from Ten till Five.

TENDER & DECAYED TEETH STOPPED

WITH ANODYNE CEMENT, which instantly allays the most violent pain, and fills up cavities, however large, and answers where every other kind of stopping has failed. Prepared only by MR. ALFRED JONES, Surgeon-Dentist to their late R.H. the Princess Augusta and Duchess of Gloucester, the late Louis Philippe, and the ex-Royal Family of France, 64, Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square. At home from 11 till 4. No connection with any person practising in the same profession.

TEETH and PAINLESS DENTISTRY.

Messrs. LEWIN MOSELY and SONS, 80, Berners-street, Oxford-street, W., direct attention to their GUM-COLOURED ENAMELLED BASE FOR ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, &c., specially commended at the International Exhibition—Class XVII., No. 3,556. Single Teeth, from 5s.; Sets, from Five Guineas.—For the successful result and efficacy of their system, vide "Lancet."

KEATING'S PERSIAN INSECT DESTROYING POWDER.

For which a Prize Medal was awarded to the Producer at the International Exhibition, 1862.

THIS POWDER is quite harmless to animal life, but is unrivalled in destroying Fleas, Bugs, Flies, Cockroaches, Beetles, Gnats, Mosquitoes, Moths in furs, and every other species of insect.

SPORTSMEN will find this an invaluable remedy for destroying Fleas in their Dogs, as also Lice for their Pet Dogs. It is perfectly harmless in its nature, and may be applied without any apprehension, as it has no qualities deleterious to animal life.

Sold in packets 1s., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. each, or post free for 14 or 36 postage stamps, by THOMAS KEATING, Chemist, 79, St. Paul's Churchyard, London, E.C.

Take notice each genuine packet bears the above name and address. See "The Field," October 7th and 9th, pp. 263, 283, and 294.

SARSAPARILLA.

WILKINSON'S (late BRIDGE'S) ESSENCE OF FLUID EXTRACT OF RED JAMAICA SARSAPARILLA is appreciated for its Purity, and marked superiority, daily prescribed by the Faculty for Impurities of the Blood, Affections of the Liver, Constitutional Debility, Attenuation of Body, as an Alternative Medicine at the Changes of the Seasons, and for freeing the system from the effects of Mercury.

In India and the Colonies it is extensively used to prevent taking complaints incident to Tropical Climates, and as a renovator of the system after Sickness invaluable.

"A superior preparation, that may always be relied on."—Sir Astley Cooper.

"We are in every respect satisfied with it."—Lancet.

"We recommend your Sarsaparilla as the best."—Medical Review.

"Latterly, in consequence of much debility, &c., subsequent to Cholera, I have freely used 'Bridge's Sarsaparilla' myself, with complete benefit and success."—J. Poett, F.R.C.S.

Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter pints. One pint is equal to eight pints of the ordinary preparations.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The public are cautioned against cheap preparations of Sarsaparilla, which, instead of being what they profess, are nothing but a decoction of common herbs, sweetened with molasses, and flavoured with American Winter Green. The genuine has "Thos. Wilkinson (late Bridge and Co.), 270, Regent-street, London," engraved on each bottle.

AGREEABLE SEIDLITZ POWDER in one bottle, protected by a case with measure and spoon included. This preparation is highly recommended, not only as a Mild Aperient, but to allay Fever, Thirst, &c.

AROMATIC TINCTURE of QUINIDINE for the prevention of Fever, intermittent or Remittent Ague, and other effects of Malaria. No person exposed to the influence of or predisposing cause of Fevers should be without it, for if taken in small doses daily the system will become so thoroughly impregnated with its principles as to be rendered proof against all attacks of Contagion or Malaria. Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter-pints.

The above articles prepared only by Thos. Wilkinson (late Wilkinson, Bridge, & Co.), 270, Regent-street, London, W.

PRICHARD'S AROMATIC STEEL PILLS

stand unequalled for restoring vigour to weak and relaxed constitutions, and have been proved to be the best medicine ever offered to the public. To those who are suffering from languor and exhaustion occasioned by a residence in hot climates, these Pills will be found particularly beneficial. They give energy to the muscles and nerves, strength to the stomach, and completely re-activate the system, so that the patient is astonished at the effects produced.

Prepared by W. PRICHARD, Apothecary, 65, Charing-cross, London. In boxes 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., 3s. 6d., and 11s. May be had of all Medicine Vendors.

KEEP AWAY THE DOCTOR is an old saying. People follow the advice, and ensure a good state of health by the simple and cheap process of taking PARR'S LIFE PILLS, which may be used with confidence in all cases of sick headache, indigestion, bilious, liver, and stomach complaints, habitual costiveness, nervous affections, &c. In most cases the sensation of illness vanishes after two or three Pills have been taken. May be obtained of any medicine vendor, in boxes, 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., and in family packets 11s. each.

RUPTURES.—BY ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

WHITE'S MOC-MAIN LEVER TRUSS

is allowed by upwards of two hundred medical gentlemen to be the most effective invention in the curative treatment of HERNIA. The use of a steel spring, so hurtful in its effects, is here avoided, a soft bandage being worn round the body, while the requisite resisting power is supplied by the MOC-MAIN PAD and PATENT LEVER, fitting with so much ease and closeness that it cannot be detected, and may be worn during sleep. A descriptive circular may be had, and the Truss (which cannot fail to fit), forwarded by post, on the circumference of the body two inches below the hips being sent to the manufacturer.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—DECLINE AR-

RESTED.—No more lamentable sight presents itself than the daily sinking of the young through consumption. At the very outset of this disease these Pills are most effective in purifying the blood, preventing its stagnation in the lungs, and removing the hacking cough. Holloway's Pills should be taken on the first warning of constitutional debility. Their invigorating properties will soon re-establish tone and regularity throughout the system; they will increase the appetite, amend the digestion, regulate the liver, and rouse the kidneys and bowels to natural and salutary action. Holloway's Pills have rescued many confirmed invalids whose energies seemed to fail them just when strength should have been greatest, and who but for these would have become weaker and worse.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THERE is, as usual, no "sensation" intelligence from the East. The Secretary of State for India has, indeed, sent out telegraphic orders to the Government of Bombay to fortify the Bombay Harbour without delay, and put it in a complete state of defence, but this need not create any excitement at home or abroad. It is not very likely that we shall soon have to fight a hard fight for the retention of Bombay.

It will not excite much interest in England to state that there has been a good deal of obstinate fighting before Herat, but that the Ameer has changed his counsels, and that a treaty is likely to be ratified between him and the Sultan Amed Jan.

The paper called the Sindian states that the aspect of affairs with Persia is somewhat lowering, and that an important official correspondence, of a political nature, is going on. This need not alarm us.

It is expected that by January next it will be possible to travel from both Calcutta and Bombay to Meerut by rail.

Street railways are to be introduced at Madras.

Sir Charles Trevelyan has called upon the merchants of Calcutta to assist him with a statement of the last year's tonnage of the port.

The Bishop of Calcutta proposes to establish a Diocesan Board of Christian Education at Calcutta, to provide for the education of the children of poor Europeans. Sir Charles Trevelyan has promised to assist the Bishop in his pious and philanthropic design.

Captains Speke and Grant, who have immortalised their names by the noble and memorable discovery of the source of the Nile, are now in England. They are both Anglo-Indian officers, and will be now added to the long and brilliant list of Englishmen connected with India who have contributed to the glory of our country in peace and war, in science and the arts. We congratulate them heartily on their brilliant victory.

"Peace has her triumphs,
No less renowned than war."

We congratulate them on their safe return to their native land after all their perils by flood and field.

There is no deficiency of Courts-martial and scandal cases in India. To the Crawley case and the Priestley case, &c., &c., we have to add that of Burney versus Eyre, which is now before the High Court of Calcutta. This case had been originally brought to the notice of the Commander-in-Chief, Sir Hugh Rose, but as the defendant was at Calcutta, and on the point of embarking for England, Colonel Burney had him arrested and brought before a civil court. The Indian press has been requested to abstain from comment on the case till the termination of the trial. We do not pretend to understand the affair yet. We only gather from very vague reports that Colonel Burney was accused of taking advantage of the absence of an officer's wife (Mrs. Willis) to write her a letter such as no virtuous woman could receive without indignation and disgust. She is said to have shown it to a male friend or relative, who remonstrated with Colonel Burney. On this the colonel apologised. But he quickly repeated the offence. Captain Eyre, a new party, then took up the matter, and threatened the Colonel with personal chastisement. Sir Hugh Rose, if we understand the matter rightly, prejudged the case, with his wonted impetuosity, accused the Colonel of "disgraceful conduct," and suspended him from his command. Captain Eyre has already undergone before the civil court a five and a half-hour's examination, and Sir Mordaunt Wells is said to have been "not very complimentary in his observations to him." Major-general Campbell and Major Turner, now at Benares, are connected with the case as witnesses for the defendant. The names of Brigadier Macpherson and Colonel Willems have also been mixed up with this unpleasant matter. We repeat that we are in no condition at present to form any very decided opinion as to the innocence or guilt, or prudence or propriety of either party.

It is said that the contract for the weekly mail between England and Bombay has been given on very liberal terms to the Peninsular and Oriental Company.

Some unknown friend to the cause of Christianity in the East has placed at the disposal of the Bishop of Calcutta a large sum of money for the erection of churches and schools at the three Presidencies of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay.

The Lightle case, after a long trial at Lucknow, has just been decided. Aga Ahmed Allee and Bundoo Beg were prosecuted by Mr. E. A. Lightle on a charge of being concerned, during the great mutiny in 1857, in the murder of eight members of one family in the streets of Lucknow. The parties massacred were relatives of the prosecutor. The defendants were acquitted, on the ground that the evidence against them was "tainted, and, from the character of the witnesses, not entitled to credence, from end to end." The Mofussilite, in allusion to this case, "unhesitatingly asserts that a more flagrant failure of justice has seldom betrayed judicial timidity and weakness so palpably as it has done in this instance." The report of the proceedings is of such great length that we have not time to go through them carefully at present, and therefore express no opinion on the subject.

An accident has happened to the screw steamer Bombay Castle, belonging to the China Merchant Steam Navigation Company. This occurred on the 21st of May, while the vessel was lying in the graving dock off the Fort. In removing her into the harbour she was fairly capsized, and laid upon her starboard beam in the dry dock. Many of her Lascars and coolies were much hurt, but no lives were lost. Her bulwarks were smashed and her engines broken. The pecuniary loss to the company is estimated at £5,000.

The Times of India says:—"We are glad to learn that the sentence on Lieutenant Jackson is one of four years' penal servitude, and not of penal servitude for life, as stated by the Lahore Chronicle. The sentence in its present shape approves itself to our judgment, for we find it impossible to believe that Lieut. Jackson intended to kill his servant. That a most severe and cruel beating was administered no man can doubt, and the offence is rightly, and, we think, adequately punished by the sentence of the court-martial. Lieutenant Jackson is to be sent to Bombay."

We are sorry to have to report the death of

Mr. J. Le Messurier, of the Jubbulpore line of railway. It is said that he died by his own hand—that he cut his throat with a penknife while labouring under a fit of insanity.

We are extremely well pleased to hear that the report of Dr. Wilson's death on his voyage home, and before reaching Ceylon, is incorrect. We took the statement of his death from the Indian papers of last mail. The papers by this mail affirm that he is still in the land of the living. When last heard of he had reached Aden, in much improved health. A very wide circle of friends and admirers will rejoice at this good news.

The prizes offered by the Bombay Government in November, 1862, with the view of stimulating and improving the cultivation of cotton, have been without any effect; and Government now states that the realisation of good prices on the spot appears the best and most acceptable reward to the producer.

The experiment made with Peruvian cotton seed at Coimbatore in November last has proved a failure. The plants appeared for a time healthy and promising, but were entirely destroyed by worms.

Two privates of her Majesty's 45th Regiment await their trial at Meerut by court-martial on a charge of murdering a native while out shooting in the district.

John Johnson has been committed for trial in the High Court of Bombay for the wilful murder, on the high seas, of Captain Flucker, of the ship Dulceith.

The Government of India has sold to Messrs. Borradaile and Co. its river steamers and cargo-boats, which cost about eleven lakhs, for the sum of three lakhs of rupees.

The ship Iskenderslah, 1,172 tons burthen, bound from Calcutta to China, grounded near Fulah, and has become a total wreck.

The Bombay Government propose to abolish the office of the chief engineer of the presidency, and to allow the superintending engineers of the four circles of this presidency to be independent heads of their respective divisions directly under the control of Government.

During the year ending 30th April last Rs. 65,000,000 were coined in the Bombay Mint. At present there is a balance of uncoined silver to the value of Rs. 25,000,000, to which addition was made by a supply of specie received by the last mail.

Mr. F. F. Arbuthnot is appointed Deputy Commissioner of Customs, Salt and Opium at the Presidency, in succession to Mr. Jenkins, retired.

The new coins for Hong Kong will be put in currency as soon as a sufficient number are struck off in the Mint of England. The copper coins are to be legal tender up to the amount of one dollar. The silver coins are to consist of dollars, equivalent in value to a Mexican dollar. Both the copper and the silver coins are to be alloyed to an extent that will prevent their being exported or melted down. On the obverse of the coins is to be her Majesty's face and bust, and on the reverse the word "Hongkong" and the date of the year. The dollar is to be a legal tender for 4s. 2d.

The Government of India is said to have abandoned the Bill for levying port dues at the ports of the Straits Settlement.

GOVERNMENT REPORT ON INDIAN RAILWAYS.

The report of Mr. Juland Danvers, the Government Director of Indian Railways, for the year 1862-3 has just been issued. According to this document, the progress made towards the completion of the lines has, upon the whole, been satisfactory. Seven hundred and forty-seven miles had on the 31st of December last been added to the 1,609½ which were open for traffic on the 1st of January, 1862. Since the beginning of this year 184 miles more have been finished, making a total of 2,528 miles upon which passengers and goods are now being conveyed. The greatest distance traversed in a direct line is on the East Indian Railway from Calcutta to Benares, 540 miles; the next greatest is the trans-peninsula line from Madras to Beypore, 465 miles; and the next from Bombay to Sholapore, across the Bhore Ghat, 295 miles. In the year 1861 the goods sent out from this country for Indian railway construction weighed 182,621 tons, and cost £1,669,443; last year these respective amounts were 188,018 tons, and £1,487,582, added to former years, makes a total of 2,597,941 tons of materials, of the value of £18,843,392, sent out to India from this country, in 3,292 ships, for the purposes of the railways. With regard to the persons employed on the open lines compared with last year, the number of natives is 35,468, against 32,148, of Europeans 2,344, against 2,181. On the 31st of December, 1862, the number of proprietors and debenture holders was 31,420, having increased by 5,260 in the course of the year, the increase being in the same ratio as the capital. In the course of the past year there has been an expenditure of £5,810,852, that in England having been £1,854,289, and in India £3,956,563. The amount raised by the companies, in addition to the sum of £2,515,496, which stood to their credit on the 1st of May, 1862, was £5,238,567, so that on the 1st of May there was a balance of £1,943,211 available for the current year's expenditure. It has been estimated that the expenditure for the year 1863-4 will be £2,012,000 in England and £4,189,000 in India, and that £5,293,000 will be raised to meet it, in addition to the balance of £1,943,211. The amount which had been raised on the 30th of April, 1862, by share capital, was £31,308,641; by debentures, £11,756,249; total, £43,064,890. On the 30th of April these amounts stood—share capital, £36,155,142; debentures, £12,062,894; total, £48,218,036. The net receipts from all the open lines for the year ending 30th June, 1862, were £434,184, against £311,367 of the previous year. The numbers of passengers conveyed in the same periods were 6,227,465 and 4,912,955 respectively. The present changeable condition of the lines, it is remarked, makes it very difficult to draw any conclusions as to their real value. While some are partially finished, and extending in length every few months, while others are finished, but are without access to the stations, and while it is uncertain what will be the cost of the permanent establishments, and what the expenses of maintenance, it is impossible to estimate, with any degree of accuracy, their remunerative powers. The amount which had been paid to the several companies for guaranteed interest up to the 31st of December, 1862, was £8,269,190. This sum is subject to a deduction of about £1,600, which the Government had received from the earnings of the railways, leaving a debt of about £6,650,000 against the companies. The annual amount that will be due from the Government for guaranteed interest, when the lines are finished, may be taken at £3,000,000; but the profits of the lines are now rapidly increasing. A considerable portion of the above sum will consequently be met by the payments into the Government treasuries in India. The liability of Government will thus diminish annually, until at last Government will be altogether relieved from it. In another year the great cotton fields of Central India and of Guzerat will be in direct communication with Bombay, and Delhi will be within two days of Calcutta.

PUBLIC DINNER TO MR. PETERSON.

On Friday evening last a public dinner was given in the Town Hall to Mr. A. T. T. Peterson, on his final retirement from the Bar, and departure to Europe for a time. Upwards of sixty gentlemen were present, the representatives of almost every profession and calling in the Anglo-Indian community; the chair being taken by Mr. Seton-Karr, C.S. His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor was present as an old school-fellow of the guest of the evening, and apologies were received from Sir Barnes Peacock, Kt., Sir Mordecai Wells, Kt., and Messrs. Bayley and Raikes. Mr. John Cochrane, the father of the Calcutta Bar, was also prevented from attending, by the state of his health. The subscribers amounted to nearly one hundred, including two Hindoos and one Parsee. The dinner was provided from Spence's Hotel, and gave general satisfaction, with the exception of the champagne, which was said to be undrinkable—by those who drank it. There was a band of music in attendance, whose performances were distinctly audible—especially by those who had the good fortune to be placed on the same side of the room. The blue lighting was also very effective, in a melodramatic sense, and was, perhaps, the better appreciated from being strictly gratuitous. Ever and anon it lighted up the window over the head of the learned gentleman, in a most weird and ghastly manner, recalling to mind the fate of Don Giovanni, or of Bertram in "Robert le Diable." Absit omen!

After the usual loyal toasts had been proposed and responded to, with the usual demonstrations of loyalty, the chairman addressed himself to the real business of the evening. With clear enunciation, an easy and fluent delivery, and in the language of a cultivated gentleman, Mr. Seton-Karr drew a graphic sketch of the career and character of the guest in whose honour that social gathering had been convened. He dwelt upon Mr. Peterson's success as a barrister, a speculator, and a politician, ascribing to him no ordinary merit in all three capacities, and with admirable tact avoiding all topics likely to awaken unpleasant and only half-lulled memories. This speech was well received, as it deserved to be, and Trojans and Tyrians thundered loud applause. But when Mr. Peterson arose and had arranged his spectacle, contingere omnes, intenteque ora tenent. The learned gentleman spoke, in reply to the toast of the evening, for one hour and ten minutes, passing in review the leading events of his own life, and the mutual relations of all classes of Europeans in this country. A general notion of the purport of his remarks may, perhaps, be gathered from the following heads of his discourse:—

After a brief but hearty expression of thanks for the high compliment that had been paid to him, Mr. Peterson expressed his pride at being himself an Englishman, although his ancestors came from Sweden. He then alluded in a jocose manner to his early life at sea, and his experiences as a manufacturer of salt at Sangoor. Passing from himself, he turned to the extraordinary position of England with regard to India. A Trading Company under the direction of men in comparatively humble circumstances, after varying success in commercial transactions, wound up as the rulers of an empire so vast that no man has yet succeeded in comprehending its wants and capabilities. The Sovereign of England, through their labours, has succeeded to the government of a people nearly equal in numbers to one-quarter of the population of the old world. That company can boast of having conferred upon their native land a territory which finds wealth and occupation for tens of thousands of Englishmen, and affords a market for the disposal of nearly twenty five per cent. of the entire cotton fabrics of England, and this without costing the national Treasury so much as a cowrie. In return for this, satirists of the last generation were wont to depict the Anglo-Indian as a yellow-skinned, peppery, self-willed, eccentric old curmudgeon; while the satirists of the present day represent him as shallow, immoral, overbearing, and cruel. The very name too, of India has the same effect in the House of Commons, as reading the Riot Act to a disorderly mob. At all this folly and ignorance we can afford to laugh, when we look around upon the magnificent country in which our lot has been temporarily cast. Still, the time has been when matters did not look so promising as they now do. There was the antagonism of the privileged trader and the non-privileged trader, and the old statutes are full of penalties against interlopers and adventurers. And when the East India Company was compelled to withdraw from trade the same antagonism continued, only under a different name, and officials and non-officials kept up the hurtful jealousies of the olden time. All that is now past, and is fast vanishing into oblivion. Frequent communication with home, and the steady influx of Europeans, have brought about a better mutual understanding, and through the mighty power of public opinion the non-official is no longer ignored. It is the duty of every Government to be conservative, but the Government of this country went far beyond that, and was positively obstructive. Since then a great step in advance has been taken in the institution of legislative assemblies. The Bengal council is not a political body, so far as party politics are concerned. It is a purely deliberative body, the admission into which of the non official element secures all the advantages usually resulting from discussion and publicity. To be a member of that council is a legitimate source of pride, however slightly some persons may be disposed to think of it.

One of the most important changes of late years is the establishment of the High Court. At first he (Mr. Peterson) was disposed to feel hurt at the manner in which the old Supreme Court was thrust aside, remembering as he did what right good services had been rendered to society, both by its judges and its advocates, who were never wanting at the call of duty. However, that, too, is now a thing of the past, and all that remains is to make its successor at least its equal; and it must be admitted that the constitution of the High Court is calculated to make it more completely independent of the Government than the Supreme Court ever could have been. The legal training of the English judges, combined with the practical local knowledge of the other judges, ought to ensure the efficiency of the new Court. A few words of compliment were due to the learned Chief Justice, than whom no man ever laboured more zealously and assiduously to discharge the onerous and responsible duties of his exalted position. He will return to his native land full of honours, if not full of years, regretted by all classes, native as well as European. The elevation of Sunbhoonath Pandit to the Bench is an innovation of the happiest augury. It opens up a new era, and offers an encouragement to his countrymen to pursue the paths of honour, industry, and sustained application. The bar of Calcutta must not be passed over in silence. Its talent and integrity are beyond all praise, but unhappily success in India has not hitherto been held as sufficient grounds for advancement to the highest honours of the profession. Neither can it be said that the Civil Service of India is overpaid for the arduous work it is called upon to perform, in a climate not favourable to prolonged exertions. Many of its members would certainly have done equally well, and probably better, had they entered the church or been called to the bar. A great and mighty mission is theirs, and one of which any man may be justly proud. They are charged with the administration of the laws over a vast territory and among unnumbered millions, differing from one another in speech, religion, customs, and manners. The old service with all its faults was worthy of sincere respect, and doubtless the new system will produce equally good men. In any case it is premature to form a judgment. Men of higher classical attainments will probably be sent out than used to be the case, but it remains to be seen whether the most learned men are also the ablest administrators. One thing, however, is certain; they will have to work very hard before they surpass their predecessors. The position of the military is certainly not so good as in the olden time, and the circumstance is to be regretted, seeing how meritorious have been their services. A country won by the sword must be retained by the sword, and it is, therefore, a false economy to weaken the European forces. The abolition of local corps was a great mistake, for soldiers never identify themselves with any particular spot. The Indian service will always be irksome to Queen's officers. It needs, as it were, to be "native, and to the manner born," before any one will devote himself heartily to a service that is only another name for exile. What great names are written in the Libro d'Oro of the old native army! Of the old school there were Clive, Eyre, Monro, Malcolm, Ochterlony, and many more. In later times we have Outram, Edwardes, Nicholson, Neill, Chamberlayne, Norman, and a long list of equally illustrious names. Then, with regard to the non-official classes it cannot be denied that trade and commerce are the best and truest rulers of a country. It is by their means that comfort is diffused abroad, and people who are comfortable are always opposed to violent changes. There is no greater peacemaker than trade. The merchant is as necessary to the cultivator of the land as the latter is to the merchant. The two are mutually dependent. Without agriculture there can be no commerce; without commerce, agriculture would never have advanced beyond horticulture. The condition of the labouring classes owes its improvement of late years to the increase of trade. In this Presidency, the Chamber of Commerce, the Trades Association, and the Landholders' Association have done much good by acting together, and have led to discussions on many questions that would otherwise have passed unnoticed. The Government might, no doubt, ignore or set at defiance the expressed opinions of such bodies; but it does not do so, having made the important discovery that the art of ruling is to go with the ruled, rather than against them. And it cannot close its eyes to the fact that, within the last thirty years, the trade of the country has been quadrupled, and its resources multiplied manifold, chiefly through the spirit and enterprise of merchants and speculators. Another powerful element in every European community is the press, which should rather be called the first, than the fourth, estate. Despotism is naturally opposed to the press, because it represents the masses, and is the medium of freedom of thought, which is apt to lead to freedom of action. Only twenty-eight years have passed since a public dinner was given in that very hall to Sir Charles Metcalfe, in recognition of the important service he had rendered to every European in the country, by proclaiming the emancipation of the press. An editor who does his duty is a most valuable member of society. Talk of love ruling the court, the camp, the grove—it is type that rules them all. Vixere fortes ante Agamemnona, but there were no journalists to record their achievements. How much of his reputation did Lord Clyde owe to himself—how much to Mr. Russell? How much does not Lord Palmerston himself owe to the support of the Times newspaper? The press of India is not inferior to that of any colony or dependency of the British Crown. It may sometimes be a little too personal, but that is in a great measure forced upon it by the very constitution of society in India. Taking it as a whole, it displays very considerable ability. Such papers as the Friend of India, the Madras Examiner, the Bombay Saturday Review, the Englishman, and the Hurkaru, hold their own against any papers published out of India, with the exception, perhaps, of one or two in New York and Australia. Some of the native papers assert that he (Mr. Peterson) was adverse to the natives, and ask what has he ever done for them. He has never done anything for them, because they never gave him the opportunity, but he was certainly not prejudiced against them as a people. Let there be no partiality shown to native or European. Let each stand, or fall, on his own merits. If the native outrun the European in the race, let him carry off the palm. But he cannot do this by acquiring a mere smattering of English classics, or by wearing polished boots, or by eating beef, or by drinking beer and brandy. He may be able to do all this, and yet be unable to contend with a true-born Briton. But better times are dawning. Exceptional cases are coming to notice of Hindoos who are equal to the men of any country. But what have the higher classes of Hindoos, as a body, done for the advancement of civilisation? Have they produced a single philosopher, sage, or statesman? Have they added in any way to the material comforts of the masses? Have they made one single scientific discovery? Have they ever availed themselves of those made by others? While all other nations are advancing, the Hindoo alone stands still. As his forefathers were five hundred, one thousand, two thousand years ago, so he is now at the present day. Had the country been occupied by wild, untutored savages, there might have been some excuse for this, but it has been held by a race who, a thousand years ago, were a thousand years ahead of Europe. The Hindoo has been stationary, and stationary will he remain so long as he persists in hedging himself round with a fence of prejudices, more impenetrable than the thickest hedge of thorn, briar, or prickly pear. No one should interfere with questions of faith and practical religion, but no superstitions or prejudices can be tolerated which impede the progress of civilisation. Any Government that humours such weaknesses does far greater injury than was ever wrought by Mahomedan conquest or Maharratta raid. The wealthy natives must be taught that life has higher aims than an unlimited indulgence in rice and ghee, or an unmeaning prodigality in pomps and pageants. If the Brahminical class would keep its position at the head of the nation, it must do so by adopting the practical ideas of the age, and advance in conformity with the spirit of the times.

Want of space compels us to omit Mr. Peterson's protest against the interference of the Secretary of State with the Government of India, and against every attempt to rule this country from a distance. Perchance, too, about this period of the evening nature's sweet restorer may have acted the part of an Indian Minister in Council, and over-ruled the action and resolutions of the body it professed to invigorate and govern for its own good. However that may have been, we must here take leave of Mr. Peterson and his comprehensive discourse de omnibus rebus et quibusdam aliis.—Bengal Hurkaru, May 15.

PUBLIC OPINION IN INDIA.

The term "Public Opinion," though definite enough in its meaning, is, from the difficulty of arriving at it clearly, too frequently used as if it were a mere abstraction. In India it is hopeless to attempt to ascertain what the popular verdict is on many points, and it is a rare event when it is declared very decisively. The full knowledge with reference to the acts of the ruling powers, which is accessible to the public in England through the medium of newspapers, is unheard of here. The deliberations of Government are in secret; the information upon which it acts with reference to the most common-place subjects is withheld from the Press; and, under the pretence of courting public discussion, Government places at the disposal of the Press a quantity of public documents which, probably, interest no one but the parties whose names they contain. It is a rare occasion when a Government record, coming through the regular channel, contains anything of greater general interest than a statistical report of Inams disposed of, or the sanctioning an additional expenditure of a couple of hundred rupees or so on some obscure project of scarcely local interest. If these are correct specimens of the matter which occupies the attention of the Governor's Council, public opinion, having no other exercise, will bring its whole energy to bear upon the manner in which the Council is employed, and will be compelled to the conclusion that his Excellency in Council has not a particularly responsible or dignified occupation. Matters of interest seem to be rapidly on the decline, to use a commercial phrase, the market is rather tight as regards those commodities at present. Government records seem, out of their barrenness, to say, like the needy knife-grinder, "Story! God bless you, I have none to tell, sir." And if these tell no stories, we are obliged to administer to them the summary treatment which fell to the lot of the aforesaid individual. We presume that the encroachments of the two Supreme Governments rob the dependent Governments of much of the power which the importance of their nominal charges would claim for them. Whether this be the case, or whether the tendency to publicity is stronger in Calcutta than in this respectable old conservative Presidency, it is certain that the Press generally is much more fertile in Imperial than local topics. The budget is at present an all absorbing subject. Nothing which a subordinate Government could do would create anything like the interest excited by a financial statement, or indeed by a few unintelligible words of a Finance Minister. Sir Charles Trevelyan will, ere long, have an opportunity of listening to the popular views regarding his budget. When here he courted public opinion, and gave us the impression that he had at least as much respect for it as his predecessor Mr. Laing. We must suspend our contribution to the public voice for a short time, until we receive a full report of the financial statement.

We purpose this morning giving Mr. Laing's views of what in India constitutes public opinion. He very properly urges the theory that India should be governed on the spot, and not by a despot thousands of miles away, breathing an atmosphere morally, intellectually, and physically opposed in constitution to that which we inhale in India. The single advantage of interference by the Secretary of State is alleged to be in the fact that the narrow views of a little knot of selfish planters cannot turn so great a man as Sir Charles Wood from the path of rectitude. The views of planters, Mr. Laing seems to admit, find an exposition in the Indian Press. He allows that the Press does support tyrannical principles, or, at least, he admits that the little knot of planters do urge measures adverse to native interests, and so connects them with the Press that, if we are not to understand that the Press supports oppression a statement to that effect should have been distinctly made. This will appear more clear as we proceed. Mr. Laing asserts that public opinion may be considered as consisting of three main elements—the official European, the unofficial European, and the native. Which of these classes is the most systematically represented by that part of the Press which finds its way into England? We do not purpose discussing this point ourselves, but when we state Mr. Laing's opinion that the unofficial public is arrayed against the official, and take into account the absolute discouragement by the Government of the Press, which no one would know better than Mr. Laing, there is no doubt of that gentleman's intention to identify the opinions of the Press with those of interlopers. This is an utter mistake. The interests of the planters have never found such warm advocates among the class to which we belong as Mr. Laing has proved himself to be. The subdivision of public opinion into elements, and the fact that the official and native elements are drawn much closer together than are any others, is fully explained and accounted for. Apart from the conservative feelings of distaste implanted strongly in the breast of the true chips of the old Company's block, Mr. Laing hesitates not to say that the planters do not get justice dealt out to them when they appear in Court in opposition to a native. Whether this be mere cause and effect, or whether it proceed from a high chivalric feeling on the part of the Judges to protect the weak in their dishonest dealings with the strong, it is sufficient to account for the fact that the unofficial element "tends to fulfil the normal functions of Her Majesty's Opposition." It also accounts for the fact that native and official opinions are so much alike. It would be ridiculous to expect anything else. Men, whether natives or otherwise, are not naturally seized with dislike to a judge who decides in their favour, even when they consider themselves on the shady side of the questions at issue. They can recognise benefactors in unjust judges, and, of course, cling to the class to which those judges belong. This combination—a consensus improborum, if it really exist—naturally makes the unofficial element very weak in comparison. Indeed, the facility with which it is ignored is notorious. Even Governors have been known to pride themselves on the contempt in which they held the opinions of the Press. It is a bugbear to suppose that its power can influence the Government here, so far as to cause it to frame measures adverse to the interests of the natives, were the power used in that direction. But its power has never been exercised on the side of oppression. If it have erred, it has been on the side of liberality. When it was well known to the Press that, whether the indigo planters had or had not brought such a state of things upon themselves, they could not obtain their rights from the ryots—while the Government itself was framing severe laws, under the plea that an extraordinary exigency required them, laws which Mr. Laing even now defends with an eloquence which would convince us, if anything could—what did the Press do? We do not intend to particularise, but we say emphatically that the Press opposed extraordinary legislation which added to the list of crimes acts which are not technically recognised as such in our native land. Again, turning to our own Presidency, surely free trade in labour is much more liberal to the labourer than is impressment. The upholders of the impressment system can find no apology for it except by taking refuge in the mystical peculiarities of the country. Yet, while the independent public was utterly opposed to anything but free trade, the official public complained loudly of the inconveniences of travelling without impressed men and bullocks! We anticipated inconveniences as the first consequence of so important a measure, but were nevertheless certain that Sir Charles Trevelyan dealt with the case in an unexceptionable manner. It is a libel on the Indian Press to allow it to be understood that it has ever defended native oppression in any form. But it can lay claim to what is probably more offensive to the official mind, namely, the merit of condemning the oppression which the interloper suffers in consequence of official obstruction.

Mr. Laing subdivides the three great elements, each into its own component parts. There are characteristics in each of the great elements peculiar to presidencies. The civilians are still further subdivided into competition wallah, hatin, and the advanced liberals. But our opinion regarding his description of public opinion in India is that it is excellent in every other respect save that most important one of giving a good idea of what he has attempted to describe.—Madras Athenaeum, May 4.

MR. W. HUXHAM ON THE INDIAN COTTON TRADE.

A letter has been addressed by Mr. W. Huxham to the Government of India containing suggestions with regard to the best means of increasing the production of herbaceous cotton throughout India. In no country but India, writes Mr. Huxham, can an adequately enlarged cultivation be effected, for although it is probable that more cotton is grown in China than in the British territories, "no means of getting any from that country can at present be devised." The writer assumes that the adult population of India wearing cotton, is one hundred and forty millions, and that for each person twenty yards of cloth are required annually, weighing four pounds. There is now grown for this number 560,000,000 lbs. With a view to increase this quantity very materially, Mr. Huxham submits that a cotton department should be established forthwith at each presidency, to consist of one or more members, together with inspectors for every district or collectorate in which the staple is grown, and that revenue collectors and commissioners of districts should act under the orders of this department. Mr. Huxham adopts Mr. Bright's singular proposition that all lands cultivated bona fide with cotton shall be declared free of tax or impost of any description during five years, and that all Government waste lands required for the cultivation of cotton should be given rent free on lease for five years; at the expiration of that period the land to revert to Government, in the event of the lessee omitting to continue the cultivation of cotton; the lessee to have the right of giving up the land "at any time after a crop, for which an advance has been received or delivered." Cotton seed ought, in the writer's opinion, to be furnished to the ryot free of cost, whenever it is obtainable; and cash advances made, without interest, to the cultivators at the discretion of the local authorities, "to be repaid in cotton or money, at the option of the ryot, when the cotton be gathered and cleaned"—the Government to have a lien on all such cotton—cultivators to have the right of selling their cotton grown under such advances "to any party after repaying such advances." A rate to be fixed as early as possible in each year, at which the Government would be prepared to purchase clean cotton from ryots or other cultivators, whether cultivated under advances or not. Cotton to be free from all tolls or imposts, whilst in transit to the port of shipment. Collectors should be directed to issue a notice that all clean good cotton would be received for the first year, "and paid for on delivery at specified district stations, at the rate of ten annas per pound for the indigenous or native sorts;" the cotton so purchased to be forwarded to the nearest usual shipping port, and disposed of by public auction, or sold in the same manner in the locality, after due notice has been given. Mr. Huxham urges that it should be the chief object of the Government to promote the cultivation of the New Orleans variety of cotton, as being the quality best suited for the European market. In no country, he says, are to be found equal facilities for increasing the cultivation, such as "a teeming population, unoccupied two-thirds of their time, cheap labour, extensive tracts of uncultivated land, genial soil and climate, moderate taxation, a fostering Government, and peace." He goes on to state, that previous to 1847 he conducted a series of experiments in cotton cultivation in Travancore, with a view to ascertain the effects of a variety of soil on each sort, the result of which proved that "with due attention to the preparation of soil, cotton of the best quality (excepting Sea Island) could be raised." Want of means, however, and the low price of cotton in England at that time, induced Mr. Huxham to give up the cultivation. It is modestly admitted that possibly some loss may be experienced by carrying these suggestions into effect; but, he adds, "when the improving condition of our revenue is considered, that we have some sixteen or more crores of rupees in Treasury balances, that from six to seven millions of wages are annually lost to our suffering operatives in England, and that the value of our cotton manufactures exported from the United Kingdom in 1861 was computed to have exceeded fifty-five millions sterling, more than three-fourths of which were made from American grown cotton, a sacrifice by Government of even half a million annually, in adopting this scheme, might be warranted and sustained with eventual advantage to millions of our fellow-subjects, for we should in less than ten years be almost wholly independent of America." To ask any one who has been held for at least five minutes in a state of breathless wonder at Mr. Huxham's simplicity, to conclude with a sentence of as many words as a centipede has legs, is as bad as galloping a racer up a steep hill after finishing a three-mile course.—Bengal Hurkaru.

PUBLIC WORKS IN INDIA.

[From a lecture by Sir Arthur Cotton, delivered before the Calcutta Chamber of Commerce.]

When Lord Canning was coming out to India, his lordship desired me to sketch out for him such a system of public works as I recommended. I did so, and showed him what I thought could be done for thirty millions. In conversation he asked me whether I thought the money could be raised, alluding evidently to the distrust that had been produced at that time by what was called the P. W. Loan. I replied I could not think how there could be a question about it, provided only that he kept the public informed what money would be required, and what was doing with it. It is an incalculable point gained, that at length the Government openly and clearly show the state of the finances. But it is impossible that the unbounded material resources of this wonderful country can be brought into operation without another step—and that is, the separation of the public works expenditure from the necessary expenses of Government, which yield no direct money returns. While such incongruous things as necessary expenses and profitable investments are jumbled up together, there can be nothing but confusion in the authorities' own minds, and distrust on the part of the public. The remedy seems as clear and obvious as possible—to have Public Works Commissioners who alone shall have authority over the funds raised for such purposes, and who shall be accountable to the public for their appropriation. I am persuaded that if this were done, the public would be perfectly satisfied, and that any amount of money might be raised; and the result would be clearly and fully laid before the public.

It is impossible so to speak, if this were done, that such utter misapprehension could be widely spread as is now constantly indicated. Compare, for instance, what is often said about the Public Works Department, with the amazing success which has almost always attended the great irrigation works, even under the terrible hindrances that have arisen from the ruinous system of confounding their accounts with the general revenue. Thus, every one of the great works that have been undertaken of late years have been left unfinished for several years, not perhaps entirely stopped, but nearly so—the Ganges Canal Works, those of the Godavery, the Kistna, the Punnaur, the Pallaur, the East Coast Canal, &c. Think of the heavy and fundamental works being executed at a great expense, and then it being found out that economy required that the minor works which were necessary before returns could be received should be left unexecuted. The Godavery delta works, for instance, have been fifteen years in hand, and the water is not yet distributed to nearly half the lands commanded by the weir. It is thirteen years since the great expense was incurred on the weir, and nearly half the returns are still unrealised for want of subsidiary works. Every rupee now expended on those petty works is yielding more than cent. per cent., but economy requires that it should not be spent yet. About ten lacs would, I believe, distribute the water over four lacs of acres, and yield about fifteen lacs of rupees a year, but economy will not allow it. So with all these works—imagine a merchant or a company building a steamer at a cost of £20,000, and then economising by not not buying fuel to work it. It must be so while the present system, one of the unhappy traditions from the India House, continues. The answer, when money is proposed for these works, always is, we cannot afford it; we have distributed all the money that can be spared. Spared from what? from paying the army, &c. What possible connection can there be between the cost of the necessary defence, &c., and an investment which is yielding more than cent. per cent.? Were commissioners appointed with entire control over the funds raised, and entrusted with the management of all the matter, it is, as it were, impossible that such a monstrous waste of public money could take place. If the Godavery works had been finished five years ago, about twenty lacs a year would have been received, or a million sterling more than has been—about one and a half times the whole cost of the works.

Were such a commission for public works established, with powers to raise funds to a certain extent, and required to publish complete statements every six months, public confidence would be restored, and no work need be delayed a day for want of funds. They would construct such works as they pleased themselves, and they could commit others to private companies. They would also have time to learn something of their duties and to attend properly to the subjects before them, which cannot be the case with those who have all the other matters of government to attend to.

I must say something more on the cost and results of these works. In Tanjore the improvements have been going on slowly for fifty years, in which time perhaps 80 lacs have been spent on new works, and the revenue has increased 35 lacs, of which by far the greater part is due to the irrigation, &c.; the returns cannot be less than 30 per cent., probably much more. The total expended in the Cuttack and Godavery districts is, I believe, about 80 lacs, but I have not the last accounts; the increase of revenue, 35½ lacs, almost the whole due to the works, about 40 per cent., while not half the returns are yet realised. The probable ultimate cost will be 120 lacs, and the increase of revenue at least 100 or 80 per cent.

But when I proposed this subject to Mr. Laing he objected to the small returns from the Ganges Canal. As this is continually said, I must show the state of this case:—The expenditure up to this time is about 2½ millions, the receipts of last year about 6 lacs, or 2½ per cent. gross. The first plain and simple answer to Mr. Laing's objection is that the project has not yet been carried to completion. The canal is made of a capacity to carry water for about a million cubic yards per hour, sufficient for about one and a half million acres; it has as yet only watered 300,000. The distribution channels have not been completed. Indeed, during the last year, great progress has been made with them, several hundred miles having been cut, and a great deal more water may be distributed this year. But even during the famine not one-fourth of the water entering the channel could be applied to the land, and when I was at Cawnpore about 100,000 cubic yards per hour, sufficient for perhaps 150,000 acres, after being brought at a great expense 350 miles, was returning unused into the river at the end of only one of the branches of the canal. Thus, after spending 1½ millions on the main works, many years have been lost in cutting the distributing channels. This is the main point in the question of the returns from this great work. It must never, however, for a moment be forgotten that, in fact, this work has repaid its cost over and over again by the incalculable benefits it conferred in the famine, both by the food it produced, and by that which it conveyed. It seems certain that, but for it, hundreds of thousands must have perished. Colonel Baird Smith reckons that it provided food for nearly one and a half millions of people for a year. It must also be remembered that it must even now be yielding a very large percentage in all, though only a small portion of it is realised directly by the Government, the principal part going to the landowners. Nothing can be more evident than that any amount of money may be wasted upon the best planned projects, by only executing the heavy works and then making no use of them. There must be something in a system producing such results, that ought to be, and can be corrected.

But I think I may take this opportunity of giving some further account of this work, the Ganges Canal, as it turns directly upon my main point,—the merging irrigation and navigation in the valley of the Ganges. There has been undoubtedly a far greater expenditure upon it than there needed to have been. One grand mistake was the excavating the whole section of the water-way, so as to carry all the water below the surface. This was entirely owing to the medical men, who went a little beyond their last in insisting upon this mode of preventing percolation, which they thought would produce fever. All this enormous additional expense was incurred not only for nothing, but it had exactly the effect the doctors intended it to prevent. They cut through the water-tight stratum, and gave the water access to the sand below, by which it is conveyed under the embankments and all through the country. Had only so much earth been excavated as would have made the embankments, and the principal part of the water been carried above the level of the ground, about two-thirds of the cost of excavation would have been saved, consequently it would have been done in one-third of the time, and the returns have been received so many years sooner. If this and some other mistakes had not been made, the work would have been returning at least 20 per cent. for the last eight or ten years. I must, however, mention another fundamental mistake—the delay in building the permanent weir at the head of the canal, the works being to this moment dependent upon the temporary dam, which has to be renewed after every monsoon, and is liable to fail at any moment when it is most wanted. In fact, it may properly be said, that this great work has neither head nor tail to it, no reliable work to secure the water being thrown into it, and as respects the irrigation, the distribution works incomplete, and as respects the navigation, no communication between it and the river. Yet there is nothing whatever to prevent the whole work being made in every way most complete both for irrigation and navigation, nor even to prevent its being made to irrigate a far greater extent of land than it was intended for. The excavation, owing to what I have mentioned, is so enormous, that an immense body of water may be conveyed by it. If money is allowed for its completion, I am satisfied that at a moderate further expenditure it may be made to return twenty per cent. upon the whole capital. The mischief of thus beginning, and not completing, a work, extends far beyond the mere waste of money expended on it; its effect in furnishing those who are seeking for them with objections to such expenditure, extends to almost the whole of India. I must also refer to the work on this canal that was injured last year. It is most urgent that at whatever cost such evils should immediately be corrected. The mischief of having to close the canal in the midst of a crop is most fatal, shaking the confidence of all landowners in the works. The real cause of the injury to that work was its being built entirely of brick, instead of the brick, masonry being covered with large stone; good stone is procurable at Burdwan, and this mistake may, therefore, be easily corrected. There is another reason why this work has not been so productive as it ought. It is, that the navigation has never been put into an effective state. The following are its defects as a navigation:—1st. Boats cannot pass from it into the river. 2nd. The bridges are most inconveniently low. 3rd. The towing paths are not carried through the arches. 4th. The current is too strong. 5th. The lock-channels have such sharp curves that boats of the length of the locks cannot go through them. 6th. The entrances to the lock channels are made at too great an angle with the canal. 7th. The fall of the canal is continued quite to Cawnpore, so that a large stream must always be kept flowing to waste in order to make the canal navigable near its end. The last twenty or fifty miles ought to be reduced to dead level by locks, so that the canal would be kept navigable, without any expenditure of water below where it was wanted for irrigation, excepting the trifling quantity required for lockage. From these defects this certainly, without exception the finest highway in the world, is not used to one-fifth part of the extent it would be, were it free from them. The loss of this to the irrigated tracts is incalculable. Could they ship their wheat, flour, &c., direct for Calcutta, even with the disadvantages of the river, much of it might be brought to this market, which is quite out of the question if there is even fifty miles of land carriage. Happily all these objects can be perfectly removed, when not only would several lacs of additional revenue be obtained from the canal, but a new value would be given to all the products of that tract, and consequently to the irrigating water.

Thus all the works necessary for the completion of this incomparable project can be effected at an excessive outlay and in a short time. And not only so, but it is capable of vast expansion, far beyond its original intention. It has been stated in the newspapers that a gentleman is now trying to form a company for the purchase and completion of this project. I only hope that, either in that way or by the Government, a work of such prodigious value and importance will not be allowed any longer to remain in an incomplete state, when there is really no shadow of a reason for it. It would not be so, were it in the hands of commissioners who were responsible to the public for the effective management of the funds entrusted to them.

This work, therefore, is no exception to the rule that hydraulic works in India do not require to be supported by oppressive and debilitating taxes. Works that will yield from 20 to 50 per cent. can stand on their own legs.

In my communication with Sir C. Wood on these subjects, he once wrote, that it was easy for us engineers to talk about executing such works, but that we had not to provide the money, as he had. My answer was, that so far from his having to provide the money, if he would only let us use a small part of the net increase of revenue which the Godavery Works were producing we could carry them into completion rapidly, and we would supply him with a large balance for his operations in other branches of the public service. At this moment, if he would allow them to spend only ten lacs a year in completing the Godavery and Kistnah works, at least a surplus of twenty would remain, provided by the engineers to assist him, out of those two districts only. The fact is that the financiers are rather the prize-agents who distribute the booty in ease and safety which we engineers have captured in many a hard battle which we have fought with the sun, the jungle-fever, and the India House, the allied forces that have arranged themselves against the material improvement of India. I must allow, though, that while we engineers raise the produce we send, the merchants turn it into money. And the sole reason why there are not at this moment many millions more for appropriation, is, that we have been prevented carrying out the various projects that have been proposed. I can most confidently assert that if Lord Canning had taken in hand the system of works I sketched out for him, at his request, at the rate of four or five millions a year, they might by this time have been returning six or eight millions a year, much more than sufficient to obviate the necessity of an income-tax and a salt-tax.

PROPOSALS FOR ESTABLISHING A BOARD OF EDUCATION FOR THE DIOCESE OF CALCUTTA.

1. The want of schools for European and Eurasian children of the middle and poorer classes throughout India is now generally acknowledged. No one can visit the upper and central provinces, nor the trading cities on the coast of Burmah, without being convinced of it. Not only is there a large number of uneducated children in almost every great town, but the traveller along new roads, or projected lines of railway, constantly finds scattered families, of overseers and others, whose children are either of necessity neglected, or else sent, of course at heavy expense, to a school at some enormous distance.

2. In a paper on this subject drawn up about two years and a half ago, but not circulated till the end of 1861, in consequence of the more urgent need of subscriptions to relieve the famine, I suggested three remedies for this great want, and proposed that they should be adopted in succession. The first was the foundation of a school for the upper provinces at Simla: the second was the establishment of a Diocesan Board of Education to give encouragement and stability to local efforts for founding various schools, chiefly in the cities of the plains, so that those who could not avail themselves of hill schools might not be shut out from education: and the third was the foundation of a school at or near Darjeeling, for Bengal. The wants of Bengal were placed last in order, on account of the existence of good schools in Calcutta.

3. The first of these steps has been taken. The Simla school is opened in the old cantonment of Jutog, about four miles out of Simla, under the charge of the Rev. S. Slater, recently professor of Hindustani in King's College, London, assisted by a trained master from the Battersea College. Though this school will certainly need some additional support hereafter in the way of exhibitions, or other help towards reducing the cost of education in it, yet for the present it may be left to take its own way.

4. The time has therefore manifestly come when an appeal should be made to the Indian public to take the second step, the establishment of the Diocesan Board. This would be a central committee, meeting in Calcutta under the Bishop's presidency, raising money to assist local efforts, procuring masters from England, paying their outfits and travelling expenses, obtaining the best school books, establishing prizes and scholarships in schools, facilitating their regular inspection and examination, diffusing information, and advising school managers as to applications for grants-in-aid from Government, and other points on which local committees are often at fault.

5. Such a Board is already organized, and has received liberal support in the diocese of Madras. In addition to the duties above mentioned, the Madras Board proposes to take part in the Christian education of natives also, and to establish classes for Scriptural instruction in connection with Government provincial or Zillah schools. That the proposed Calcutta Board should ultimately undertake a similar task would be most desirable; but its power to do so must depend on the support which it receives from the public. And in its infancy it will probably be better not to incur it with too many objects and duties at once. For the present, therefore, the work of the board will be limited to that stated in the preceding paragraph.

6. There is already ample work for such a board in this diocese. The School Committee at Malacca has asked me to supply them with a schoolmaster, which I know not how to do. The establishment of a school at Moulmein was delayed for a considerable time through the difficulty of procuring a master. As a result of the present movement, schools are coming into existence at Howrah, Allahabad, Seetabuldee, Rangoon, Meerut, Cuttack, and other stations, which will all be benefited by the help and encouragement of a central body fulfilling such purposes as I have mentioned above.

7. With regard to the religious constitution of schools in connection with this board, it may be well to reprint a paragraph from my former statement referred to in paragraph 2:—"The first object (of the Simla School) is to train children to be, by God's blessing, earnest and thoughtful Christians, and it is undoubtedly intended that the teaching should be that of the English Church. Yet, considering how rarely it is necessary or desirable to introduce into the education of the young minute points of controverted theology; considering, too, the mutual toleration and sympathy, which the bond of a common faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, as opposed to Brahminism, and Mohammedanism, must produce among all Christians in India, I should be very sorry if the school were so conducted as not to be available for the education of children belonging to other Christian bodies also." In order to carry out these principles the following definite rules seem desirable. In every school connected with the Board there shall be daily prayers, and Scriptural instruction shall be regularly given, which all the scholars shall attend without exception. The chaplain of the station shall be ex-officio a member of the school committee, and the master shall be a communicant of the English Church. Regular instruction shall be given at certain times in the catechism and Prayer-book; but any child whose parents or guardians are not members of the Church of England may be excused on application from learning its distinctive formularies.

8. It is now desired to collect money for the purposes of this board in two distinct forms, (1) donations, which shall be invested in Government paper, and of which it shall spend the interest only; and (2) annual subscriptions, to be expended year by year. All persons, therefore, who are favourable to the plan are requested to support it in either or both of those ways. An encouraging commencement has happily been made.

A gentleman in England has placed at the disposal of the Indian Government a considerable sum for the multiplication of churches and schools in the three dioceses, and one moiety of the portion of his benefaction allotted to Bengal will be entrusted to the administration of this board as soon as it is formed.

9. The general scheme sketched above was submitted for the approbation of the late Viceroy, and his Excellency forwarded it to the Home Government, accompanied by a minute, expressing the cordial concurrence and approbation of himself, Mr. Beadon, and Sir Bartle Frere, who then constituted the Government of India.—[See Supplement to the Calcutta Gazette, 23rd February, 1861.] It received the sanction of Sir Charles Wood, who promised that the help of the State should be given to carry it out. As the grants-in-aid authorised by him will be proportioned to the sums raised by private subscription, there is every encouragement to give it a hearty support, and it is therefore now earnestly commended to the sympathy and liberality of the clergy and laity of this diocese, as an essential part of the duty which we owe to the country in which God's providence has placed us.—[See Lord Canning's minute, October 29, 1860, and Sir C. Wood's despatch, Jan. 16, 1861, in the Supplement to the Gazette referred to above.]

10. The main reasons for entering on this new field of benevolence cannot be better stated than in the language of Lord Canning: "Besides the ordinary rate of increase in Eurasian births, and in the births of European children in India, there is the fact that the influx of Europeans into India is gradually becoming larger, and that with the augmentation of our English army, and the advancement of works of English enterprise, the births of English children of mixed marriages in India cannot fail to be enormously increased. If means for educating these children are not promptly and vigorously encouraged, and aided by the Government, we shall soon find ourselves embarrassed in large towns and stations with a floating population of Indianised English, loosely brought up, and exhibiting most of the worst qualities of both races; whilst the Eurasian population, already so numerous that the means of education offered to it are quite inadequate, will increase more rapidly than ever. I can hardly imagine a more profitless unmanageable community than one so composed. It might be long before it would grow to be what could be called a class dangerous to the State; but a very few years will make it, if neglected, a glaring reproach to the Government, and to the faith which it will, however ignorant and vicious, nominally profess. On the other hand, if cared for betimes, it will become a source of strength to British rule, and of usefulness to India."

11. Such are the warning words of one whose life was sacrificed in the service of this country. Let us remember, in connection with them, that while we give a hearty and zealous support to that missionary work, which is of absolutely inestimable value to India, we must not allow its wider, and if I may so speak, more exciting and romantic interest to overshadow the duty of caring for our own countrymen. The Apostle, who may be fitly called the first and greatest of Christian missionaries, in the midst of the absorbing labour of evangelising two continents, was yet careful to bring "alms to his own nation and offerings," and has warned us that "if any provide not for his own, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel." Of those for whom we are now appealing, some are strictly "our own," "our own nation," English children of our own blood. Others, though less absolutely identified with us in origin, yet are partakers of the "like precious faith with us," and belong to a race which owes its existence to our occupation of India. In either case the neglect of our poorer and more helpless brethren will be a grievous scandal, and a degradation of Christianity in the eyes of the natives of this country, and therefore the measure now proposed may be regarded as having a direct bearing on missionary operations, and as likely to be, by God's blessing, directly conducive to missionary success.

12. No doubt, the demands on public munificence are already so numerous and so urgent that any one may well pause before he puts forward another. But no Christian Church is fulfilling the whole duty to which it is called, unless, besides, ministering to the spiritual wants of all its members, it also aids in three great works. Of these the first is the temporal relief of the poor and the afflicted; the second is the extension of Christ's Gospel among the heathen; the third is the education of the young. And it is to the last of these three essential parts of Christian duty that the Church in India is now called.

G. E. L. CALCUTTA.

Bishop's Palace, Easter Monday, 1863.

It is proposed that the first board shall consist of the following members (with power to add to their number):

The Bishop of Calcutta, President ex-officio; the Hon. Sir C. Trevelyan, K.C.B.; the Hon. Mr. Justice Norman, the Hon. Mr. Justice Seton Karr, Captain Williams, R.E.; H. Woodrow, Esq.; E. B. Cowell, Esq.; the Venerable Archdeacon Pratt, the Rev. Dr. Kay, the Rev. E. C. Stuart, the Rev. T. H. Burn, the Rev. M. C. Walters, Secretary.

Donations and annual subscriptions will be thankfully received by the secretary, by any other member of the board, or at the Bank of Bengal, Calcutta Diocesan Educational Fund.

The following letter, in which Sir Charles Trevelyan signified his acceptance of a seat on the board, is appended to the above appeal, as expressing most forcibly its object, and the grounds on which it rests.

CALCUTTA, 12th April, 1863.

My dear Lord,—I heartily concur both in the object of the paper which you have sent me, entitled, "Proposals for establishing a Board of Education for the Diocese of Calcutta," and in the mode of giving effect to that object, and this good work shall have all the support and help in my power.

The matter ought to be regarded in two distinct points of view, a bare statement of which is sufficient to command assent. The first is the duty we owe to our countrymen and their offspring, who are scattered over the face of this great country, in a manner which makes them peculiarly dependent upon the combined action of their more fortunate Christian and English brethren in all that relates to the upholding and improvement of their moral and intellectual condition. The other is, that, without such combined, well sustained action, the Christian minority inevitably becomes absorbed in character and manners in the Hindoo and Mahomedan majority (several painful instances of which I could relate), and that portion of the Christian community which is in most habitual intercourse with the natives, becomes a scandal and a stumbling block in the way of their conversion. Example is better than precept; and although no means of instruction are to be neglected, I am of opinion that more can be done for the religious improvement of the natives by exhibiting Christianity to them, in all its blessed practical fruits, than by any amount of direct, didactic teaching.

You have, in my opinion, judged wisely in proposing, at any rate at first, to confine the Calcutta Diocesan Board to the immediate objects of its institution. Nevertheless, if faithfully and ably administered, it cannot fail to exercise a wholesome influence over the whole field of Indian education.

Believe me, my dear Lord Bishop, very sincerely yours,

C. E. TREVELYAN.

The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Calcutta, &c. &c.

MISCELLANEOUS.

WRECK.—The Telegraph Gazette of May 13 announces that the ship Iskenderah has become a total wreck above Fultah. We learn that no hope was at any time entertained of floating her off. A portion of the cargo has been saved by cargo-boats despatched to her assistance by the agents in this city.

HIGH COURT OF CALCUTTA.—Lucy Lang v. W. C. Hurry and others. Advocate-General and Mr. Newmarch for plaintiff; Mr. Bell for Joteepersaud; Mr. Eglinton for the Administrator-General. This was a suit to recover the sum of a lakh and fifty thousand rupees from Lallah Joteepersaud and William Cobb Hurry. It appeared that Mr. John Lang, the husband of the plaintiff, Mrs. Lang, was the legal adviser of Lallah Joteepersaud, who had made a settlement to a large amount upon Mrs. Lang. Mr. Hurry, the trustee of the settlement, subsequently, in consequence of some arrangement with Joteepersaud, delivered up to him the bond by which the money was secured. Mr. Hurry afterwards died, and was therefore represented in the suit by the Administrator-General. The Advocate-General said that an arrangement had been come to between the parties by which it was agreed that Mrs. Lang should accept Rs. 90,000 in lieu of all claims, that the money should remain in the hands of Mr. Hogg, the Administrator-General, and a release be obtained from the children as they came of age. The parties would severally pay their own costs. Mr. Peterson was present, and expressed his willingness to be examined as to the proposed arrangement being expedient for Mrs. Lang and the children of the marriage. His examination was conducted as follows:—Mr. Peterson to Mr. Newmarch. I am brother of Mrs. Lang. She has three daughters and one son. The eldest daughter is married to Count Adolphe Ricardi, a major in the Italian army. She was of age before she married. A settlement was made on her marriage. A power to compromise this suit was inserted in it. The marriage took place at Leghorn, where the settlement was executed. The parties were domiciled in Italy. The trustees have a power to execute any release. The second of the children is William Bland Lang, who was of age last year. I have a letter from him, in which he authorises me to make any settlement I think proper. The third child is Lucy; she was twenty years of age last April. She is living at Pisa. The name of the fourth is Margaret; she was born in the latter end of 1844. I saw the whole family eleven months ago, and explained the whole matter. They all expressed their satisfaction, and left the whole matter in my hands. Mr. and Mrs. Lang have not lived together for many years. She obtained a divorce, a mensa et thoro from him. Mrs. Lang has a life interest settled upon her for herself and her children. That is the only provision they have. The father has abandoned his family and has provided nothing for them. I have always been on the best terms with Mrs. Lang. I am the nearest male relative of the family, and, indeed, the only one. I am of opinion that this proposed arrangement is for the benefit of the family. Joteepersaud told me that he was paying the money for the benefit of Mrs. Lang, because he could not trust her husband. To Mr. Bell: I consider that this settlement is really for the benefit of the family. I know that there is a cross suit. The costs of Mrs. Lang and her family will be paid out of the Rs. 90,000. They will not be less than Rs. 6,000 or 7,000. The court expressed itself satisfied with the engagement, and accordingly dismissed the suit.

GREAT EASTERN HOTEL COMPANY.—India, at least Calcutta, is decidedly the "promised land" of the genus Boniface. Men never grudge any outlay on eating and drinking, provided the venison be fat, and the wine of a curious vintage. For an illustration we need go no further than the Great Eastern Hotel Company, which has just declared a dividend of 10 per cent. for the half-year, or at the rate of 20 per cent. per annum. Thus, one may find his warmest dividend, as well as "his warmest welcome, at an inn," and, if a shareholder, may there take his ease without incurring an inconvenient amount of as alienum.—Hurkaru.

SHIPPING.—Sir Charles Trevelyan, we understand, has called upon the authorities of the Custom-house to submit for the information of the Government a statement of the tonnage of all vessels, including native crafts, which have arrived at Calcutta during the last year.

THE BENGAL BONDED WAREHOUSE ASSOCIATION.—The report of the directors of the Bengal Bonded Warehouse Association, for the half-year ended 20th April, 1863. 1. Your directors submit the usual half-yearly statement of account for the approval of the proprietors. 2. The rents collected during the six months ended 30th April, 1863, amount to rs. 82,280-3-0, which about equals the sum realised during the previous half-year; but there has been a gradual clearance of goods from bond during the last six or eight weeks, and those withdrawals, together with a higher assessment since January, have diminished the surplus available for a dividend. 3. The surplus amounts to rs. 59,470-4-5, which is nearly equal to 30 rupees a share—the last declared dividend; but after reserving rs. 2,200 for the repair and building fund, and rs. 1,300 for a bonus on your establishment, which your directors recommend, the balance is equal to a dividend of 28 rupees per share, free of income-tax. 4. Mr. D. Cowie and Mr. R. B. Mackay go out by rotation. Mr. Cowie offers himself for re-election; Mr. T. R. Grant is a candidate for the seat in the direction vacated by Mr. J. N. Bullen, proceeded to Europe; and Mr. Steuart Gladstone for that vacated by Mr. R. B. Mackay. David Cowie, Wm. Maitland, H. E. Braddon, R. B. Mackay. Calcutta, 13th May, 1863.

TEMPERATURE OF THE PUNJAB.—A correspondent in the Baree Doab writes of the temperature in that part of the Punjab as singularly low for the season of the year. "On the morning of the 30th April the thermometer stood outside at sunrise at 64 deg., and in the house at 72 deg., the hills visible, and punkas completely at a discount." This low state of the temperature is owing to violent storms that have been passing over some parts of the country eastward, generally accompanied by hail of an unusually large size. In the neighbourhood of Reia, the first encamping ground of the Beas, hail and rain fell so abundantly that a regiment on the march were obliged to halt. Some eighty head of cattle are officially reported to have been killed, as also several men, women, and children. Two of the latter are said to have been frozen to death. Fortunately most of the wheat had been cut, so that the damage to the crops has been small. The young locusts are beginning to show themselves in some place in great numbers, and as the unripened crops are no longer available are doing damage to the sugar, cotton, &c.—Delhi Gazette, May 5.

COINERS.—Lieut. Young, district superintendent of the Azimghur Police, has succeeded in capturing a formidable gang of counterfeit coiners, who have long defied detection. The arrest was effected with considerable skill. The village in which they harboured was surrounded by the police at daylight, and on entering the suspected house the officers were assailed by thousands of bees, no doubt purposely placed there to prevent the intrusion of unwelcome visitors. This circumstance created suspicion, and on the hive being removed a complete coining apparatus was discovered. Further search revealed quantities of counterfeit coin buried beneath the floor of the house, consisting of rupees, eight and four anna pieces, and a quantity of sham jewellery. The trade in bad money "has been carried on," writes the correspondent of the Allahabad Gazette, "for three generations, and the Zemindars in the neighbourhood were well aware of the fact." They plead, however, as an excuse for their tacit connivance, that the offenders were notorious ruffians and a terror to their neighbours. In the months of February and October bullocks, and other beasts of burden, used to be laden with these coins, and sent across the Gogra river into Bengal. The whole gang has now fortunately been arrested, through the exertions of Lieut. Young.—Bengal Hurkaru.

MR. J. H. BATTEN, recently appointed Commissioner of Agra, is to officiate as an extra judge of the Sudder Court during the absence of Mr. Wynyard, and the prospective absence of Mr. Roberts on leave. This arrangement leaves the acting appointment of the Commissionership for six months to be filled up.

DINNER TO MR. A. T. T. PETERSON.—A novel spectacle, in truth, was that presented in the Town Hall of Calcutta on Friday evening last, when the head of the Bengal Government was seen taking a prominent part in doing honour to a strongly democratic, and once somewhat turbulent, member of the non-official community. It might be more correct, perhaps, to characterise such an occasion as a gratifying one, rather than as a novelty, for it is happily no new thing for Englishmen to shake hands and strike up a sincere friendship for one another, when the political strife by which they were divided has terminated, or faded away. The more strenuous the previous opposition, the more cordial is the feeling of mutual respect that succeeds the excitement of battle. Like Virgil's bees, all these fierce emotions, all these combats of giants, subside into a calm and peaceful repose through the sprinkling of a little sand from the hour-glass of Time. The presence of Mr. Seton-Karr in the chair was even more remarkable than that Mr. Beadon should be one of the company. The angry reminiscences that produced a schism among the Scottish residents in Calcutta on last St. Andrew's Day have evidently become softened in the interval that has since elapsed, and both parties have probably grown somewhat ashamed of the exaggerated partisanship of only twelve months ago. It is the misfortune of all small communities that differences of opinion are apt to lead to personal estrangement, as it is almost impossible to distinguish between individuals and the measures or principles they represent and uphold. On the other hand, this inconvenience is partially counterbalanced by the facility with which reconciliations are effected, and former asperities smoothed over and forgotten. So soon and so completely, indeed, does the stream of oblivion sweep away the landmarks of past animosities, that not a few of those who assembled to take a kindly leave of Mr. Peterson were not even aware of the part he bore in the battle of the Black Acts; and some, perhaps, had scarce even heard of those days of doubt and trouble. Various motives, no doubt, combined to bring together so many gentlemen belonging to almost every profession and calling; but there was one underlying feeling common to all, which took its rise in the sincere and healthy respect entertained by Englishmen for men of original views, independence of spirit, and energy in action. Such a one was Mr. Peterson in a very eminent degree. No one could be for even a short time in his company without recognising a higher order of individuality than is often met with in these days of conventionalism, when so few take the trouble to form opinions of their own. Whatever might be his faults, or foibles, in the estimation of his opponents, none could deny his force of character, his manliness, his honesty of purpose; and these are virtues that cover a multitude of sins. It could have been no ordinary occasion that induced upwards of sixty gentlemen, out of such a small community, to meet at a public dinner in the month of May, in the midst of thunder, lightning, and rain. And we are much mistaken if Mr. Peterson himself was not gratefully impressed with this token of kind and respectful sentiments on the part of those among whom he had fought the battle of life, giving and receiving many a hard blow, but ever bearing himself boldly and frankly in the fight, faithful to his friends and ready to forgive his foes.—Bengal Hurkaru, May 11.

THE SIKHS ON FOREIGN SERVICE.—The levying a regiment of Sikhs to do duty in Ceylon is a natural consequence of the "general service" system. It is in itself an excellent measure, and the principle is susceptible and deserving of a wide development. In New Zealand, for instance, the Sikhs would adapt themselves to the irregular mode of warfare followed by the natives far more readily than do our own over-drilled and tightly-disciplined regiments. At the Cape, also, they will find a genial climate; and, in the event of a Caffre war, might be turned to excellent account in contending with those brave and wily barbarians. In some respects they hold a similar position under the British sway to that held by the Germans under the Roman Empire, though not at all likely to prove such dangerous auxiliaries as did their Teutonic analogues during the decadence of the ancient mistress of the world. There is this difference, however, that the more the Sikhs behold of other quarters of the globe, and the better they are enabled to judge of the magnitude of the dominions of which they form but a small part, the more convinced will they become of their own comparative insignificance and of the utter fatuity of any attempt to assert their independence. This lesson, indeed, might be taught in a manner never to be forgotten, and with an outlay altogether trifling, as compared with the immense advantages to be derived from it, by despatching a couple of regiments, cavalry and infantry, to England. The curiosity and interest inspired by these fierce-looking warriors among our own countrymen would be as nothing to the astonishment of the Sikhs themselves on realising the full extent of the wealth and power of Great Britain. Their first idea of London would probably be the same that suggested itself to Marshal Blucher—that it would be a fine city to sack; but the next would be an ample corrective of any such lawless notions. Our own cavalry, too, at the different permanent camps, might borrow many useful hints as to the care, keep, and management of their chargers from the splendid horsemen of our North-Western frontier. The expense of sending a thousand men from Kurrachee to England, through Egypt, is not to be taken into consideration in view of the pacific preachings of these men on their return to their eastern homes from the sweet little isle on the verge of creation. Will Sir Charles Trevelyan spare a small portion of his surplus for such an interesting and useful experiment?—Bengal Hurkaru, May 11.

RAILWAYS IN INDIA.—We have been informed by a high authority in all matters of administration that "there is no country in the world where, with common prudence and exertion, railways can be made with greater advantage" than in India. All that is now wanted is, "not Government assistance, but English capital and skill, and, above all, experienced and able railway management." On this subject there can hardly be two opinions. In the beginning, nothing could have been done without the Government guarantee. Indian investments were at the time even less popular in England than they now are, and not one million sterling could have been raised without the certainty of good and immediate interest. A guarantee was accordingly given and the necessary funds were obtained. It is now, however, a moot question whether the whistle has not been purchased all too dear. Considerable progress, indeed, has been made with main trunk lines, but at a ruinous cost and with an irretrievable waste of time. The incessant interference of the Government officials has been most harassing and vexatious to all concerned with the construction and management of these lines, the efficiency of which has also been greatly impaired from the same cause. It is, indeed, even now the chief obstruction in the way of "experienced and able railway management." There is no difficulty in obtaining men of first-rate abilities to undertake the entire supervision of the lines already constructed, or in progress, and to regulate all that belongs to the passengers and goods traffic. Only men of that stamp will not patiently brook the daily and hourly interference of officials far less versed than themselves in the mysteries of railway administration. But if the Government is determined to expend its superabundant energies on matters of which it is totally ignorant, why does it not insist upon the erection of respectable stations, with suitable approaches? Why, too, does it not appoint a sufficient number of licensed porters, to afford easy facility to passengers arriving or departing, to prevent overcrowding, and to attend to the luggage? Why, again, does it not take care that no noisome holes and pools are allowed to poison the air in the neighbourhood of the stations, as is the case even at Sealdah? Why, in short, does it not bestir itself in the direction where its action might be really useful, instead of intermeddling with details which are far better left to the practical knowledge and experience of the able and energetic managers of the different lines?—Bengal Hurkaru, May 8.

THE "FRIEND OF INDIA" AND THE "TIMES OF INDIA."—The Indian public is aware that the Times of India on the one side, and the Friend of India on the other, represent two great parties in the field of Indian politics. The Times of India is, and ever has been, deeply impressed with the conviction that our national honour and well-being require that we should rule this great country, the empire of which we have assumed, in the interests of its own people. For many years, through evil report and through good report, we have striven to beget the conviction in our countrymen that we are entrusted with the rule of this great country, not for our aggrandisement, but for the welfare of its own people. We have lived to see this great principle deliberately adopted by the Ministry and people of Great Britain, in spite of the short-sighted and selfish clamour with which its adherents were once pursued. The Friend of India has most unhappily, we think, chosen another line. It has, for years, identified itself with what it has called "the Colonist party;" and it is the leading organ of that party. Had it been true to the principles of which it was once the exponent, there would have been no room, perhaps, for the Times of India. Whether from conviction or from policy, however, the journal has for years past seemed to bear the title of the Friend of India by way of irony. On almost every great question that has arisen it has been found using its influence to embitter the relations between the governed and the governing classes by open, or insidious, endeavour to reduce the people to a lower platform of rights than the colonists. Had the counsels of the journal been followed from the period of the mutiny up to this day, we should have taken leave of peaceful government for ever. The thick and thin supporter of every act of the late Lord Dalhousie; the ready apologist of all annexation and resumption proceedings; foremost in the cry for blood during the quelling of the mutiny, and the passionate and remorseless libeller of the late Lord Canning—the journal has been marked by a spirit of hatred to the people, at once unaccountable and most lamentable. It is now engaged, week after week, in an effort to establish that "God, history, and political economy," require us to crush the twenty-five millions of ryots in Bengal, already half ruined by the lamentable error of Lord Cornwallis. The journal impiously warns its readers that God has set his face against ryot properties, and boldly bids us believe that the sickening spectacle our home civilisation presents—where masses of squalid poverty and festering crime exist side by side with wealth and luxury almost inconceivable—is the highest, the final, form that God has destined civilisation everywhere ultimately to take.—Times of India, May 18.

DISBANDMENT OF THE ALLAHABAD VOLUNTEERS.—All shams must speedily terminate; the volunteer movement in these provinces is no exception to the rule. No. 2 company of the gallant Allahabad Volunteers is now no more. Its fate was decided on Friday morning. Only eight members attended, and the colonel intimated that an application will be made to Government for its disbandment. The remaining body of Volunteers are not to don their uniform any more, nor are they longer to bear the title Volunteers, and their rifles and accoutrements are to be taken away. As there are about 500 Rs. in hand from a fund raised by the Volunteers, it is intended that a few prizes shall be provided out of this money, which will be given to good shots next cold season, when those members who are at Nynee Tal will have returned. Thus ends a movement well conceived, but nipped through the bad management of those who were placed at the head of it. The bad management of those at the head of the corps would not have had the power to do mischief if the loyalty of Englishmen had not been wantonly insulted by the Legislature.—Delhi Gazette, May 16.

RAILWAY FROM ALLYGHUR TO BOLUNDSHUHUR.—Our readers will be glad to hear that on or before the 1st of October the railway will be open from Allyghur to Bolundshuhur, and that, in the event of an ample supply of Saul timber, for sleepers, being speedily supplied, the line will be extended to Meerut, and opened in January next. From about the same date, we are told, it will be possible to travel hence to Bombay, as well as to Calcutta, entirely by rail.—Mofussilite, May 8.

MURDER.—Two privates of H.M.'s 45th Regiment have arrived at Meerut from Roorke, under escort, and will there await their trial by Court Martial, on a charge of murdering a native, while they were out shooting in the district.

THE TRUSTEES OF THE BRITISH MUSEUM having applied to Sir C. Wood for the purpose of obtaining for that institution a collection of aerolites from India, the several Governments have instructed officers in charge of the central museums in the three Presidencies, all collectors, sub-collectors, civil judges, principal Sudder Ameens, and medical officers, to afford all the aid in their power in furtherance of the above object.

MAJOR-GENERAL WALTER SCOTT.—Among the passengers who left our shores for England by the homeward mail steamer of the 14th inst. we notice the name of Major-general Walter Scott, R.E., who we understand will not return to India again. Major-general Scott entered the service in 1825, and during his long service of nearly forty years was ever distinguished for his professional ability. At the siege of Mooltan the ability he displayed and the untiring energy with which he worked were the admiration of all, and the brevet lieutenant-colonelcy he obtained was but a very poor reward when we consider how honours have been lavished on the army since the commencement of the Crimean war. Though accustomed to express himself strongly in opposing what he considered unsound in the views of those junior to him in the service, there was always such perfect honesty of purpose and such genuine kind-heartedness about him that he seldom gave offence, and we believe we are right in saying that probably no officer of the Engineers has ever left our shores who was held in higher esteem by his brother officers.—Times of India.

"WISE IN HIS GENERATION."—The Subadar who is now undergoing his trial at Lucknow on a charge of being one of the ringleaders of the mutiny in 1857 was apprehended in a clever manner by the police, who deserve great credit for the capture, which was effected in the following manner: Having got scent of his prize, one of the police went to the village where he heard the Subadar was residing, and gave out that he was in distress, having been threatened with explosion from the police, because he could not pass his drill. He had few months' leave of absence during which he might learn what he could, but he had no hope of succeeding. A zemindar of the place with whom he was acquainted told him he knew of a man in that village who would soon perfect him in his drill. The Subadar was introduced, and after his identity was made sure of was arrested by his pretended pupil. A reward, we believe, was offered for the apprehension of this man. If so, it ought assuredly to be given to the policeman, who deserves the reward for being "wise in his generation." As yet he has not received it.

COLLISION BETWEEN NATIVES AND A EUROPEAN.—The Delhi Gazette notices another of those unhappy collisions between natives and a European, which have been so common of late. It appears that an officer of the customs department, Mr. Carter, stationed near Agra, whilst out shooting, went to a native village for the purpose of buying a goat. An altercation ensued, and either then or subsequently the gun went off by accident, and killed one of the villagers. Mr. Carter was immediately mobbed and pursued to his house, where he remained besieged until information was given to the police. The villagers all came forward and swore that Mr. Carter killed the man out of malice prepense and designedly. From the nature of the case, he has no evidence but his own statement. Our contemporary adds that the affair is undergoing investigation.—Hurkaru.

CHRISTIANITY AND BRAHMOISM.—A theological controversy of deep significance is at present dividing Calcutta into two parties. It is the great battle between Christianity and Brahmoism. The terrible war-cry has been raised, and the crusade has commenced with all fury. It is impossible to check now its irresistible course. Let us anxiously await its result, and watch with interest the progress it makes. We need not say that the issue of this controversy has special reference to the momentous question of the Christian future of India. Nor is there any doubt, on the other hand, that the Christian missionaries have received their material note of warning from the daily increasing force of the Brahmos and their onward movements. We understand that that old, experienced, and indefatigable labourer in the field of Christian Missions in India, Dr. Alexander Duff, will, perhaps, for the last time, endeavour to establish the truth of his doctrines against the opposing stream of Brahmoism, by a series of public lectures to be delivered by him shortly. In the meantime, we beg to draw the reader's attention to the lecture of Baboo Keshub Chunder Sen on the Brahmo Somaj. We are told that it is the intention of that gentleman to give two more lectures, one upon the "Basis of Natural Religion or the Philosophy of Intuition," and another upon the "Brahmic Theory of Atonement."—Indian Mirror.

ABUSES IN THE UNCOVENANTED SERVICE.—The question of the relative merits of the old Haileybury men and the young Competition-wallahs promises to be as hotly contested as was the battle of the broad and narrow gauges in the railway world at home. But under cover of the noise and confusion of this strife very serious abuses are creeping into the Uncovenanted Service, and which must no longer be allowed to escape exposure. One of the most frequent and justifiable complaints made against the Covenanted Service in Bengal is based on the extreme youth of the joint magistrates, and indeed of the magistrates themselves. It has never happened, however, that the power to fine and imprison their fellow-creatures was bestowed upon youths who had scarce completed their majority. But such is now the case in the Uncovenanted Service. Not once only, or twice, have young men been appointed to responsible posts that demand experience and knowledge of the world. No later than Monday last our GAZETTE columns announced the appointment of a young gentleman, certainly not twenty-two years of age, to the rank of deputy-magistrate and deputy-collector, with the temporary charge of a sub-division, and the full powers of a subordinate magistrate of the first class. The gentleman in question, we understand, is a very excellent and estimable person, and discreet beyond his years, but that does not justify the risk, nor will it remove a sense of indignity from the minds of natives of mature age, who have to submit their disputes to his decision. What possible confidence in the justice of his case can any man have, who has to appear before the judgment seat of such a beardless judge? Appeals will be multiplied beyond precedent, for no one will submit to the decrees of an inexperienced boy. His Honour the Lieut. Governor is mistaken if he imagines that magistrates may be forced like pine-apples, or prepared for the bench under a hand-glass. Knowledge of mankind can only be acquired by slow degrees, and by mixing with all classes and callings, but at the age of twenty-one it is not likely that a very large supply of that indispensable quality in a magistrate can have been collected and stored up.—Hurkaru, May 13.

THE BENGAL GOVERNMENT has granted to Captain Lloyd, Deputy Commissioner of Kamroop, six months' leave, under medical certificate, for any part of India. Should he wish to proceed to Europe, the leave must be sanctioned by the military department. Mr. Becket has been ordered to fill the vacant post during Captain Lloyd's absence. The Kamroop regiment is to be disbanded, and incorporated with the new police.

DR. LINTON, who goes home shortly to retire from the service, will be succeeded by Dr. Beaton, from the Madras Presidency.

SIR CHARLES TREVELYAN will himself remain at his post in Calcutta, though his family are unfortunately obliged to seek health in the Neilgherries. The office of superintendent of army clothing in Bengal has been abolished, the duties being divided between the Ordnance Department, under Colonel Turner, C.B., and the office of the clothing agent, Major Turnbull. We trust we shall not see the anomaly repeated of the latter officer auditing his own accounts, which was the case a few years ago.—Friend of India, May 14.

LAHORE EXHIBITION.—It is in contemplation to hold an Agricultural Exhibition, similar to the one suggested by the Bengal Government, but on a somewhat more extensive scale, at Lahore, during the period of the Viceroy's expected visit next cold season. Besides agricultural produce and implements, it is proposed that manufacturers should be invited to exhibit their wares, whether shawls or other woven fabrics, gold and silver ornaments, and works of art, "and in fact every variety of article manufactured in the Punjab." It is also intended to ask collectors of antique and other rare and costly articles to exhibit their curiosities. A small balance remaining in the hands of the local committee of the late London Exhibition will be made available on the present occasion.—Bengal Hurkaru.

PUNJAB RAILWAY.—That portion of the Punjab Railway, thirteen and a half miles in length, which connects the city of Mooltan with what may be called its port, at Sher Shah, on the Chenab, was opened for public traffic on the 6th of May. The railway in the direction of Lahore from Mooltan is said to be making satisfactory progress. The line is laid from Cheechewatnee past Horuppa, and from the Lahore end past Rahvind.

THE POST-OFFICE.—Who is to be the new Director-general of the Post-office? Mr. Riddell, we regret to say, has been compelled to return home from Aden in ill health, while we rejoice to learn that Dr. Paton proposes to retire from a post in which he has contrived to give universal dissatisfaction. We recur, therefore, to the question with which we commenced this paragraph—Who is to be the new Director-general of the Post-office?—Hurkaru.

A BRANCH of the Central Bank of India is to be established at Madras, and will commence business early in June.

MADRAS.

HOW NOT TO DO IT.

After six months' solemn meditation, the Madras Government has issued "rules for the sale of unassessed waste land." We know that the subject of landed rights in a ryotwary province, and in a district where there are merasidars, is involved in much difficulty. But these rules refer only to unassessed waste lands, in which no rights of private proprietorship or exclusive occupancy exist. Yet the ruler of this Sleepy Hollow must not be disturbed by troublesome settlers. In Sydney he had a "cabinet" to manage all that for him, and was allowed to take his ease. Was he not sent to India as a reward for doing this work well; and why should he, in the autumn of his life, be expected to do more than enjoy himself as much as a dread of the climate will allow him?

And so, with a conservatism that would shock even the Secretary of State for India and his council, it is directed that no one, without the special order of Government, shall be allowed to purchase a grant of more than 500 acres, or of more than ten acres if within towns, villages, bill stations, railway stations and sanitarium. One would suppose that all Madras was cultivated, instead of only one-fifth of it, and that the population swarmed, as on the seaboard of China, at the rate of 800 to the square mile. But, as if this limitation were not enough, the plot must be compact, must be surveyed and have "durable boundary marks." When the unfortunate first applicant has deposited the survey money for a plot which somebody else may buy over his head, and the survey has been made, should the collector then discover that the land is not saleable, the applicant must still pay the expense of surveying it, as well as of surveying any excess beyond the proper limits. This is worse than the Bengal Government's repudiation of the acts of the Superintendent of Darjeeling. But, even when the money has been deposited, the applicant must wait till the collector finds it "possible" to demarcate the plot, that is for a period which in most parts of India will be some years, such is the dearth of surveyors. Suppose, however, the land to be surveyed, it must be advertised for three clear months, and even then the collector may alter the advertised time and place of sale, and of this other fourteen days' notice must be given. No upset price is fixed, as in other Presidencies, for the auction sale when it does take place. After surmounting all these obstacles, let not the heroic capitalist too prematurely rejoice. If a stream runs through his little farm of 500 acres, or his garden plot of ten, or a road to which there is a "customary" right, he must submit. Even then it shall be competent to the Government to except the whole or any part of any district from the operation of these rules.

Yet these rules are passed for a Presidency which has the finest mountain table-lands in the tropics, and a railway completed from coast to coast. We pity the Madrassees, and advise them to try the really liberal terms which prevail in other parts of India. In Burmah and the Central Provinces they may get thousands of acres of the finest cotton and rice land for two shillings an acre in fee-simple tenure. True there are no roads there, but the land would be worth holding till there are. We cannot believe that Sir W. Denison, who has issued these rules, was ever governor of two Australian colonies, nor can we understand how he came to be made a governor at all. Is he not a Denison?—is perhaps a sufficient explanation of the anomaly.—Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

DEATH OF COLONEL OUCHTERLONY.—The Madras papers announce the death of Colonel J. Ouchterlony at Ootacamund, on the 29th April, in consequence of gastric fever. The Madras Times remarks on this sad event, "in him the State has lost an able and zealous servant, and the corps one of its cleverest and bravest members."

A CHURCHYARD ON THE DECCAN.—The Deccan Herald mentions a fact not generally known, that, Miss Jewsbury, who married a clergyman of the name of Fletcher (the Rev. W. K. Fletcher) is buried in Poona churchyard. The inscription on the tombstone runs—

RESTS THE BODY OF
MARIA JANE JEWSEBURY, WIFE OF

WILLIAM FLETCHER, CHAPLAIN.
SHE DIED OCTOBER 4, 1833, A.D.

Endowed with genius her name lives
In the literature of Britain.
Endued with faith, she "counted all things but loss
That she might win Christ,
And be found in Him,"
At the latter day.

Of the occupant of another grave in the same churchyard, our contemporary relates a grotesque story:—"Amongst the records of the dear departed, the curious visitor will find a little memorial, erected to the memory of a Major Snodgrass, who, some forty years ago, or it may be more, was paymaster to the forces in these parts. Like many other paymasters, and those of modern times too, he came to grief; and Sir Lionel Smith intimated to him that, unless he was prepared to furnish accounts and explanations by a given time, he had better put a pistol to his head, and settle matters by blowing his brains out. Snodgrass did not fancy this, and neither did his wife. They, therefore, took the undertaker into their confidence. An artilleryman had, fortunately for them, died that day, and his body was dug up; the head was then shattered with a shot, and a letter was written to Sir Lionel Smith, stating that Snodgrass could meet death, but not dishonour! An inquest assembled; but out of respect for the feelings of Mrs. Snodgrass, the body was not uncovered. Her evidence was taken down, so was a little brandy-pawnee, and the jury retired, perfectly satisfied that Snodgrass had committed felo de se. Long afterwards, his old friends met him in London, under a new name, Mrs. Snodgrass having married a second time! It was great fun, after dinner, to drink to the memory of Snodgrass—the real Simon Pure honouring the dead artilleryman's remains with as much emotion as if they had really been his own!"

DUVERGE.—During the last week, Duverge, the soi-disant captain of the schooner Sphynx, which so mysteriously disappeared from Colombo, arrived at Cochin about the end of April, and on being brought by Messrs. Regnaud et Fils before the authorities, he gave most evasive and contradictory answers. Before any further steps could be taken, however, Duverge decamped from Cochin, leaving behind no clue as to the route he had taken; but he has since astonished the agents here by intimating to them his arrival at Tell-cherry. On receipt of this information a telegram was at once despatched to the Superintendent of Police there, for the immediate capture of the fugitive, but with what result is not yet known. I fear he will get to Mahe and embark for Reunion or some other French settlement.

DEFAMATION AT OOTACAMUND.—In the course of the investigation of the case White v. Syk, Mr. Sharpe, of the Civil Service, who accompanied Colonel White into court, was heard to apply a very abusive epithet to Mr. McIvor, for assisting Mr. Syk in his defence. The words "d— Scotch blackguard" were distinctly heard by two witnesses, Mr. Dawson and Mr. Syk, and also by the prosecutor and the Court, his Honour of the bench immediately noticing the expression, when Mr. Sharpe apologised and retracted his words, but he would offer no apology to Mr. McIvor. This gentleman, therefore, had no other alternative but to take legal measures to obtain redress for the wanton insult offered him; I say wanton, for it was elicited in evidence that the defendant had never previously exchanged a word with the prosecutor. The two chief points in the evidence for the prosecution were clearly established,—1st, that the words just noticed were uttered with emphasis; and, 2nd, pointedly applied to Mr. McIvor. The defence set up was that the words were never applied to the prosecutor, but to a friend of the defendant. This friend, who appeared to have a very convenient and elastic memory, swore that the words "d— Scotch blackguard" were addressed to him in chaff, that his grandfather, he believed, was a Scotchman, but he himself "a mongrel" and that he could not account for the expression being used except it was by way of chaffing him! The name of this friend was Le Geyt, an officer and a gentleman, as the defendant styled him. To my mind, this witness's evidence was as unsatisfactory as it was thoroughly absurd, for it is utterly preposterous to imagine that an abusive term could have been meant for him when he gave no provocation, not even the slightest, for such a marked insult."—Correspondent of Madras Athenaeum.

CULTIVATION OF PERUVIAN COTTON.—The following particulars in connection with the cultivation of Peruvian cotton have been published by the Madras Government, and will be read with interest:—"The cotton seeds are sown at a distance, at least, of six yards of each other, and each plant becomes a tree, continuing to yield fruit for ten years, and longer (it being understood that they must be supplied with water at frequent intervals). After six years or so, the quality of the fibre degenerates, so that it is inexpedient to allow the plants to remain in the ground longer than six years. The plants flower and yield cotton twice in the year, but only one of the two crops is good, so that if there is a fair crop in December, it must not be expected to gather anything to speak of in June. As to the quantity of clean cotton per plant, there are many conflicting accounts, but two pounds per plant, one with another, will be about the yield during the year. As to irrigation, experience goes to show that the plant requires it at very frequent intervals, at any rate for twelve months after sowing. The plant does not come into its full bearing until it is three years of age, when it is a bushy tree."

BOMBAY.

THE REBEL HOONDIES.

As was to have been expected, the account given by the Bombay Saturday Review of the "hoondies" (drafts) drawn upon Mr. Juggonath Sunkersett by Captain Nuttall's police, has excited a good deal of remark in the Press. "It is all very well," says the Friend of India, "to say Mahadeo Rao is an impostor, and was lured on to his fate by Captain Nuttall's spies. The decision of the judge of Sholapore, who condemned him to death, was most particular in showing the opposite; and the conspiracy lately discovered at Hyderabad, got up by the Nana's emissaries, was of a most serious and extensive character. It is true that we are strong enough to despise such intrigues, but for the sake of native credulity and folly we should be stern to punish them. We wait with interest for the decision of the High Court, and the explanation of Government as to the conduct of the bankers whom Captain Nuttall charges with cashing the Nana's drafts."

The Phoenix, a journal conducted on very different principles from those of the Friend of India, remarks also:—"The man's account of himself, that which the police laid before the Sessions Court, was doubtless a lying one; but it must not be forgotten that for treasonous purposes in this country, specially when a grossly ignorant population has to be tampered with, falsehood, wily, and unsparingly used, is necessary. False reports, false insinuations, utterly untruthful misrepresentations, were what most conduced to get up the mutiny of the sepoys, and the rebellion. It may be that the 'Nana's cousin' is no cousin of the Nana's; but it does not follow that he is not the Nana's agent, commissioned to represent himself as the brother or cousin of that rebel, as in fact something like the real Peishwa, lest the natives, apt to distrust agents, and to require the presence of the principal, should consider him but an impostor making unauthorised use of the Nana's name. There can be no doubt that the prisoner aimed at rebellion, went very actively to work to bring it about, and was supplied with funds. Under all the published circumstances of the case, we hold that the action of the Bombay Government does not appear to great advantage. Immediate inquiries should have been made with respect to the alleged 'cashing of hoondies,' and this though the local Government may have disbelieved the story."

Our contemporaries have been misled by the studiously uncandid version they got of these hoondies, in the first instance, from the columns of the Review. The length of "the finding" precludes our publishing it in extenso, but the facts concerning the hoondies are as follows:—The prisoner affirms that the entire series of papers brought forward by the prosecution were written under Guzrazshing's direction, Guzrazshing being one of Captain Nuttall's most active policemen. Well, we affirm that no man, possessing the most moderate share of candour and common sense, could read the evidence narrated in the finding without arriving at the conviction that the papers were so obtained. The policemen concerned in the sham plot make no concealment that they were so. The very first evidence set forth in the finding is that of one Nuncoomar, a police spy, and it runs thus:—"I and Guzrazshing (Captain Nuttall's crack man) and prisoner, and several sepoys in disguise, whom Guzrazshing represented as his followers, then went to Mandvie in the Moglaee and there, on Guzrazshing's advice, prisoner, wrote out commissions of military service and gave one to each of them; that presently after we moved on to Papanash, and there prisoner on Guzrazshing's suggestion wrote out and distributed more commissions; that soon after Guzrazshing lured him to Ukergoan, where prisoner wrote out the hoondies in evidence, and made a person there represented to him as a sowcar (a policeman in disguise)—Ed. T. of I.) accept them; and that presently they went on to Pangaon, where prisoner was seized by the police while in the act of writing a commission for another of his pretended followers (policemen—Ed. T. of I.)."

Now police-man after policeman corroborates this testimony to the letter. The story of one witness is the story of all; and the man must be an idiot, with such evidence before him, who professes to remain in lowest doubt of the real nature of the conspiracy. It is clear as day, that the police, having got scent that the man who was living as a fakeer in the Moglaee was a fugitive of the Nana's party, set themselves to wheedle, or bully, the wretched creature into overt crime. The man is plainly an imbecile: for we positively find the witnesses affirming that Guzrazshing made him believe that "the crowds of people" assembled at the fair at Papanash were gathered together to follow him in his desperate attempt! Not a living man seems to have been concerned in the conspiracy, but the miserable creature himself, and the police into whose hands he fell.

And now more especially for the hoondies. They are set forth in the appendix to Captain Nuttall's report as follows:—

Rupces 50,000.

Hoondie on Sunkersett Nana, residing at Bombay, granted by Rungoo Huree Punt, residing at Dharawew.

Rupces 20,000.

Hoondie on Yeknata Balapa, residing at Beer, granted by Rungoo Huree Punt, of Dharawew.

Rupces 40,000.

Hoondie on Dewaram Atmaram, of Poona, granted by the above Rungoo Huree.

Rupces 10,000.

Hoondie on the Shah of Daguba Kaley, at Nainpoor (Nagpoor), granted by the above Rungoo Huree.

These hoondies, says Captain Nuttall, "are drawn out by the prisoner in his own hand writing, and signed by him, and purport to be for his own use." But Captain Nuttall does not add that Rungoo Huree Punt, in whose name they run, was a mere police agent doing duty as a sowcar, to fool the poor fanatic to the top of his bent. From the account given of these hoondies by the Saturday Review, and the reference made to them by Captain Nuttall in his letter to Mr. Hart, one would suppose that they were bona fide hoondies upon the secret agents of the Nana for raising funds. But if Captain Nuttall entertained any suspicion whatever that these hoondies would be cashed, if presented to Mr. Sunkersett, or the other parties upon whom they were drawn, why did he not have them presented? For the simple reason that he knew the way in which they had been obtained, and that they were the concoction of his own agents. Upon the supposition that the hoondies would have been paid, if presented—the supposition he makes for the mere purpose of investing the case with an air of gravity—how does he reconcile it with his duty, that he did not at once present them, or represent to Government the propriety of so presenting them, without an instant's delay? For the palpable reason that Captain Nuttall knows as well as we do, that the hoondies were the fabrications of his own police. By professing to treat them seriously, he has placed himself in the dilemma of proving himself unfit for the position he holds, or capable of a suggestio falsi for enhancing his credit with the public. It is incredible that with the true history of these hoondies before it, the Saturday Review should have made its disingenuous attack upon Mr. Sunkersett. Whatever Captain Nuttall's capacities, [the Review does not lack penetration, when it serves his purpose to display, it. In the present case, he has most cruelly and with a mala fides plain to the dullest comprehension, sent the impression abroad all over the country, that one of the native members of the Bombay Legislative Council is a traitor and secret agent of the Nana. We affirm that no honest man with the facts of the trial before him could have a moment's hesitation in attaching their right value to these hoondies. It is these spiteful and incessant attacks upon native gentlemen, that renders loyalty all but impossible in the country, and a heavy account will have to be given to posterity for the mischiefs that result from them.

The police know the real worth of these hoondies as well as we do. They were written at police suggestion, granted by a man who was a police spy, doing duty for the nonce as a sowcar, and are known by the police to be not worth the paper they were written upon. Captain Nuttall asks us to believe that so little fit is he for the position he holds that after arresting a man whom he believed to be the Rao Sahib, and finding upon his person a bona fide hoondie drawn upon one of the members of the Bombay Council, he took no steps whatever to test the worth of those hoondies, by having them presented for payment. The Reviewer professes to swallow this monstrous story. The whole action of the police shows that these documents were their own fabrication. Will Capt. Nuttall explain how it is, if he had the least suspicion that these hoondies were genuine, that he did not follow them up with the steps their discovery imperatively demanded? The simple fact is, that he knew their real history too well.—Times of India, May 20.

MISCELLANEOUS.

POLITICAL AGENT AT ADEN.—A Kurrachee contemporary announces that Colonel Merewether, C.B., has been nominated political agent at Aden, and that he will proceed to join his appointment after the completion of the duty on which he is now engaged at Muscat.

CHRISTIANITY IN BOMBAY.—The Gospel has been preached for fifty years in Bombay, and throughout that period educational agencies have been at work; and yet we are strongly of opinion that there is a more stubborn and a more carefully-organized and formidable resistance to Christianity, than there was thirty years ago. There is not so much open hostility to it; indeed there is a certain deferential regard paid to it; but this is partly owing to the increased feeling of security, the feeling that they have found other alternatives, a higher level where the assaults of Christianity are felt less rudely, than when they were on the low level of mere Puranic Hinduism.—Bombay Guardian.

COLENSOISM IN INDIA.—The death of poor Mr. Carr in May last is greatly regretted by all who remember his services at this station (Kurrachee). True, he was not an eloquent man, nor so extensively popular as the much regretted gentleman who has just left us, and who, unfortunately alike for his hearers and himself, had been drawn away, ere he left us, to follow a little way the doubting footsteps of "the great Dr. Colenso.

Who counted from one up to ten so
That he found the Levitical
Books unauthorised,
And he wrote to tell the black men so."

How true it is that great men are not always wise! Mr. Watson, in his farewell sermon on Sunday evening, entered ably into his own defence, comparing his case to that of St. Paul, assuring his hearers that he had satisfied his own conscience, and that he intended to remain in the Church, in the hope of reforming what he considers its abuses.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT TO THE STEAMER "BOMBAY CASTLE."—The screw steamer Bombay Castle, Captain Wadge, belonging to the China Merchant Steam Navigation Company, met with a most unfortunate accident on the morning of the 21st inst., by being capsized and laid upon her starboard beam in the dry dock. The Bombay Castle has been lying in the graving dock off the Fort for upwards of two months, undergoing a thorough overhaul, including new boilers, &c. Her repairs having been completed, it was determined to move her into the harbour. For this purpose preparations were made in the usual manner, and everything proceeded satisfactorily until the vessel was afloat. No sooner was she clean off the ground than she gave first a list on the starboard side, and then heeled right over on the same side. The scene that ensued it would be impossible to describe. The utmost consternation prevailed, and the most extraordinary reports were current as to the number of killed and wounded. But only twenty or thirty lascars and coolies are found to be hurt, two or three seriously. Fears were entertained that some coolies engaged in the hold at the time were crushed by the falling ballast and machinery, but an examination of the lower deck and hold has proved that no lives have been lost. As already stated, the vessel has completely turned over on her side, her decks being almost perpendicular. Her bulwarks are smashed, her masts are sprung and splintered, her rigging is destroyed, and her engines are broken up. The ballast and debris are being rapidly removed, after which there will be little difficulty in righting her. Various reports are current as to the cause of the disaster. Some say that the weight on deck caused her to list, and thus produced the catastrophe; but the precaution had been taken of putting into her some forty tons of extra ballast. Others assert that she was not properly afloat when the shores gave way. However this may be, it is providential that the accident occurred where it did. Had she gained the open harbour, and capsized there, the loss of the vessel would have been certain, and of life fearful. The pecuniary loss to the company is estimated to be about £5,000. The Bombay Castle has hitherto done more for the success of the company to which she belongs than any other vessel they own. She has been commanded by Captain Wadge—one of the company's oldest and most trusted servants, and one of the most experienced seamen that ever sailed out of Bombay—ever since she was bought by her present owners. We hope that the hull will be found to have sustained no serious damage, and that Captain Wadge will have the pleasure of again sailing in her at no distant date. We may remark, that he was not in the dock when the accident happened. —Times of India.

THE PRIESTLY AFFAIR.—It is as well to caution hasty readers of newspapers against the statements which frequently appear about the Mhow Court Martial and the Priestly affair. It is constantly stated, with every appearance of confidence, that the Commander-in-Chief in England has written an order on the subject, and that in that order he reflects severely on Sir Hugh Rose. Now, we believe all these speculations to be entirely worthless and not entitled to the smallest credit. Whether his Royal Highness has ever written a line on the subject, or opened his lips with reference to it, is a point on which we believe the informants (or moonshinemongers) of all these papers are completely and absolutely in the dark. —Poona Observer. Our contemporary is in error. We have not ourselves seen the Duke of Cambridge's order, but have had its purport explained to us by one through whose hands it has passed. —Times of India.

MURDER OF MR. E. FLUCKER.—The chief officer of the ship Dalkeith, which arrived on May 2 at Bombay, from Liverpool, reports that the captain, Mr. E. Flucker, was murdered by one of the seamen during the voyage. The prisoner has been made over to the police.

SUICIDE.—A sad occurrence has taken place here, Mount Aboo. A young man named Noonan was engaged to a lady, but owing to some disfavour on the part of her parents, Noonan was informed that he was to consider the engagement as dissolved. After the receipt of this information, he took to drinking, and in three days became delirious. In this state he attempted to put an end to his life with a revolver, but his hand being unsteady, the aim was not well directed, and the bullet merely entered the fleshy part of the arm near the shoulder. The effect of the shot was to restore him to his senses, for when he found himself bleeding he sent for a surgeon, who extracted the bullet and sent Noonan to hospital, placing a guard of three men over him. There he remained quietly all night, and next morning was heard to say, "what a great ass I have been making of myself." At intervals he would talk in a rambling manner, and it was seen that the man's mind was deranged. I regret to say that sufficient precaution was not taken to guard him, and in a fit of delirium he sprung from his cot and ran to a well, into which he threw himself head foremost, and was drowned in about six feet of water. The well is about two hundred yards from the hospital, and has a wooden cover, which is generally kept locked, but it so happened that at the time the bheesties were using the well. The poor fellow was interred with military honours in the Aboo Cemetery, deeply regretted by all.

THE SIND RAILWAY COMPANY.—From the eighth annual report of the Sind Railway Company it appears that during the year ending March, 1863, very considerable progress has been made in extending the line. At Kotree, the upper terminus, the subsidence of the Indus has tested and proved the soundness of the works. The length of the river frontage available for boats, flats, and steamers, is two thousand feet. The traffic manager's report is particularly important, as illustrative of the rapid development of the trade in cotton. It states that "over one hundred waggons laden with cotton are brought into the station at Kurrachee every day," and adds, "we are now receiving machine-pressed bales of cotton and hemp from up river, and lately four hundred and eleven bales were received from Ferozepore for shipment to England." This is the first consignment of pressed bales ever sent down the Indus, and "among the first importations of the kind from the interior of India." The importance of pressing or screwing the bales instead of despatching them loose is forcibly illustrated. At present, with every care and attention, only seventeen loose bales can be loaded on a truck capable of sustaining double the weight, if properly compressed. It is urged, that if screwing were more generally adopted, the facilities for adulteration would be much lessened, "because bales marked and numbered do not stand the same chance of being tampered with as cotton forwarded in loose bales." The quantity of cotton brought down to Kurrachee from Kotree, last year, amounted to 60,710 bales, of which 12,285 were conveyed on board the Flotilla steamers, and 48,425 by native boats, the gross total weight being 17,138,960 pounds, of the aggregate value of Rs. 6,071,000. Cotton in large quantities, grown to the southward of Delhi, is now finding its way to Umrutur for transmission to Kurrachee for shipment, "and the trade in wood, silk, flax, and all the great staples exported to the United Kingdom, is gradually finding its way to Kurrachee, so much so that the trade, which amounted in 1861-62 to three millions sterling, had, during the first nine months of 1862-63, reached the high figure of £3,500,000, exhibiting an increase during the nine months of half-a-million." During the remaining three months, the busiest season of the year, the amount is expected to reach £5,000,000. The general traffic on the Sind line of railway has steadily kept pace with the increase of rolling stock; the grand total earnings for passenger and goods traffic during the year being £75,632. The total expenditure, from the date of opening the line to the public, has been £574,803. The affairs of the Indus Steam Flotilla are represented as being in a "promising condition." Several additions have been made to the fleet of steamers, and the bi-weekly communication with Mooltan has been regularly maintained. The report concludes with stating that "both up and down the river the boats have carried full cargoes; but before the Flotilla can be largely remunerative, the departure from both ends of the line must be more frequent—say once a week.—Bengal Hurkaru, May 12.

BY THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL.

Military Dept., May 8.—No. 98.—The Bunnoo station order, dated April 23, by Maj. J. Hood, comdg., apptg. Lieut. S. J. Browne, officg. 2nd in command, 6th Punjab inf., to act as station staff officer during the absence of Lieut. J. W. McQueen on priv. leave, is confirmed, as a temp. arrangement.

SIR JAMES OUTRAM.

Simla, May 2.—Political.—No. 219.—In publishing for general information the foll. despatch from the Sec. of State, the Gov. gen. desires to express the sincere, though melancholy, gratification which he has derived from the perusal of its contents.

The generous and noble character of the late Sir James Outram, his devotion to duty, and his brilliant services, both civil and military, won for him the admiration and esteem both of the Government and of the people of India. The Gov. gen. feels assured that, while deploring the loss which the nation has sustained in his death, the members of both services, and the Indian community generally, will appreciate the high tribute which has been paid to his memory by the Govt. of the Queen.

Political.—No. 25.

India Office, London, March 20.

H. E. THE RIGHT HON. THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA IN COUNCIL.

My Lord,—Your lordship will have learnt from the public papers that death has deprived the Government of India of one of the most distinguished of its servants in the person of Sir James Outram: and you will, I feel assured, have regarded the demise of this gallant officer with the same strong feelings of regret as I have myself experienced in common with all my colleagues in the Council of India.

2. I have now to communicate to your Excellency that, as a mark of our high appreciation of the eminent services which, on many fields, and in many political and military capacities, Sir James Outram rendered to his country; of the distinguished purity and disinterestedness of his conduct; and of the devotion which he at all times evinced, both to the service of the State and to the advancement of the welfare of the people of India, we have seen his remains laid in the grave in Westminster Abbey with befitting solemnity and respect, and defrayed the expense of the funeral from public funds.

3. From the honours thus bestowed by the Govt. and the reverence paid by all classes of the community to an officer who, by his own unaided exertions, raised himself to the highest post under your Govt., the members of the public services in India will learn that duty done in that country is not watched less earnestly, or appreciated less cordially, in England for the distance at which it is performed.

I have, &c.,

(Sd.) C. Wood.

By order of H.E. the Viceroy and Gov. gen. of India.

THE COMMAND OF A DIVISION.

May 2.—No. 50a.—It is announced, for general information, that the Right Hon. the Sec. of State for India has intimated, in his despatch No. 119 of the 30th March last, that the Sec. of State for War and H.M. the F.M. Cg. in C. have concurred in his suggestion that when an officer of H.M.'s Indian forces of the rank of colonel is selected for the command of a division in India, a local commission as major-general should be conferred upon him, in the same manner as such a commission is granted to an officer of H.M.'s British forces, under similar circumstances, during the time that he may hold a divisional command.

In every future case, therefore, of a colonel of the Indian Army being selected for the command of a division on a full vacancy the name of the officer selected will be reported to the Secretary of State in view to the necessary steps being taken for the submission of his name for a step of local ranks, the Governments in this country meanwhile, when thought necessary, conferring upon the officer so selected the temporary rank of brigadier-general.

EXAMINATION TESTS.

May 9.—No. 252.—The foll. extract of a despatch, No. 380 of Oct. 15, 1862, addressed to the Govt. of India by the Right Hon. the Sec. of State for India, is published:—

"It appears that no tests have yet been laid down by your Govt., but that you have in your communication to the Govts. of Madras and Bombay stated that officers who had served less than one year in their present appointments on Feb. 18, 1861, were to be admitted only as probationers; but that on completion of the full year's service they would, if possessed of the requisite qualifications, i.e., if they had passed in Hindoostani and in the prescribed tests for any department in which they were employed, be confirmed with effect from the date of the corps, and would be entitled to reckon their actual previous staff service towards promotion; and that all that was at present required was to gazette officers to the staff corps, who had held appointment for less than 1 year as probationer.

"Acting apparently on this authority, the Madras and Bombay Govts. have admitted officers so situated as probationers, subject to the provisions of para. 75 of G.O., No. 332, of April 10, 1861, and by subsequent orders have confirmed the appt. of these officers on the completion of their year's service, notwithstanding that they have not fulfilled these conditions, no tests having been yet laid down by the Govt. of India.

"It is to be regretted that the proposed tests were not more expeditiously determined upon and promulgated.

"I consider, however, that the whole of the officers to whom your inquiry refers should be called upon to pass those tests, before their appt. to the staff corps is confirmed, and I trust that no further delay will be allowed to occur in fixing and making public the tests for the information of the service at large."

So soon as the tests shall be determined, the names of the officers affected by the foregoing order will be published.

DIVORCE COURT JURISDICTION.

A CASE came before her Majesty's Court of Divorce and Matrimonial Causes on the 11th instant, which raised a question of very great importance to English residents in India. The Divorce Act enacts in general terms that "any husband may present a petition for dissolution of marriage;" so that, prima facie, there is jurisdiction here over all marriages of British subjects in all parts of the world. But the Lord Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Blackburn, and Mr. Justice Crompton, all agree that there is great difficulty in the question as to whether the Divorce Court has jurisdiction over foreign marriages of British subjects. It is assuredly a question that ought to be settled without delay, and it certainly seems strange that it should be doubtful whether British subjects in India, a British possession, are entitled to the same advantages of British law as their fellow-countrymen at home. They ought not to forfeit their birthright merely because they have crossed the seas and acted under the impression that British law follows the British flag.

CARBOLIC ACID AS A SANITARY AGENT.

THE horrible combination of heat and filth and moisture to which some of the most fatal diseases in India are fairly attributed, and which has so lately done its work of destruction in the districts of Hooghly and Baraset, has at last roused the anxious consideration of the Municipal Commissioners at Bombay, who have called upon Dr. Hewlett, attached to the army at that Presidency, to state his opinion of the utility of the carbolie acid, and to note some of the chief cases in which it can be most advantageously employed. In his reply, Dr. Hewlett explains that carbolie acid possesses the power of instantly stopping putrid fermentation, and that it effects this by coagulating the albuminous particles of any organic substance with which it comes in contact. For sanitary purposes its application with a view to prevent the evolution of gases detrimental to health is easy and inexpensive. It has to be neutralised with slaked lime in convenient vessels, mixed with a sufficient quantity of water, and allowed as a carbonate of lime into the sewer to be operated upon. "Night soil thus operated upon before putrid fermentation has been established, becomes," says Dr. Hewlett, "the richest manure for the land, as it has lost none of its nitrogen in the form of ammonia, and also preserves all its phosphates." Carbolie acid may also be used during epidemics to mix with the water used to water the streets, or in the form of powder it may be used to deodorise all accumulations of offensive matter in private houses or public streets and buildings. Nature is wondrously provident and economical. She intends nothing to be lost or wasted, and allows science to educe the greatest good from the greatest apparent evil. Substances that in the eye of ignorance are simply insufferable nuisances, are found to teem with the elements and means of life and health, and vegetable abundance and monetary prosperity. An importation of things offensive to the senses—that to the vulgar seem only meant to be got rid of as speedily as possible—the apparent refuse and waste of nature—is said to be equivalent to an importation of grain and cattle. Thus, men of science may as effectually enrich a country by their quiet labours in the study—labours that unfold the secrets of nature and turn her resources to the best account—as men of business by their industry and sagacity and enterprise in the counting-house or the public mart;—and we are glad to see that our compatriots in the East who have been accused of a too-selfish concentration of the faculties on the sole object of acquiring the means of making a fortune and hurrying from the land, are directing their attention to local sanitary improvements and other works of great public utility that will render India a healthier and more agreeable place of temporary residence, not to themselves only, but to all future British sojourners there, and to the Natives of the country, who are now our fellow-subjects, and who should be so treated, in spite of a darker complexion and a different creed.

THE CRAWLEY CASE AGAIN.

THIS deplorable and disreputable affair, that seems, in different degrees, to have soiled the names of almost all who have been in any way concerned in it, from the lowest to the highest, has been so thoroughly revived that it has the freshness and interest of a new case. The court-martial to which Colonel Crawley brought Captain Smales assembled at Mhow on the 1st of April, 1862. His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief, when he issued his now memorable Memorandum, nine months later, no doubt flattered himself that he had brought the case to a termination, and that he should hear nothing further upon the subject. If so, no man was ever more mistaken. The whole matter, commenced about fifteen months ago, is now reopened, and it will not soon be settled. The court-martial lasted sixty days, and the report of its proceedings extended over 600 pages. Everything connected with the affair has been like the alexandrine line which Pope compared to a wounded snake, that "drags its slow length along." His Royal Highness's Memorandum extends to twenty-one paragraphs, and, generally speaking, they are by no means short ones. Sir Hugh Rose's Remarks extend to forty-five. We wish these documents had been as satisfactory and just as they are lengthy and elaborate, and we should not have complained of their being somewhat wearisome and verbose. These long and ponderous papers resemble each other in nothing but their length and weight. In other respects they are in direct conflict. Sir Hugh Rose decides that poor Lilley had taken quite enough wine, ale, and gin "to compromise the life of a man in exercise and rude health,"—in other words, that he died of drink. The Duke of Cambridge observes, that if the Indian Commander-in-Chief "had been better acquainted with some of the facts of Sergeant-major Lilley's case, he would have taken a different view of it from that which his remarks prove him to have done, and would not have attributed the death of that unfortunate non-commissioned officer to excess." And yet Sir Hugh Rose had studied the 600 pages of that Court-martial Report! Unhappily, however, the direct and ex parte statements of Colonel Crawley seem to have had far more weight with his Excellency than the evidence before the Court. Sir Hugh Rose pronounces Colonel Crawley to be "an officer of much intelligence, energetic zeal, and fully qualified for the command of a cavalry regiment." The Duke of Cambridge acknowledges that when he placed Colonel Crawley at the head of the Inniskillings "he believed him to be an officer of considerable talent, knowledge, and zeal; but, unfortunately, as has been proved, he is an officer not gifted with the special talent which unites firmness of command with the tact which inspires confidence and creates good-will." The Indian Commander-in-Chief says that the regiment, both before and after Colonel Crawley joined it, was in a state of "insubordination." "There was discord between the officers of the regiment"—"a great want of unanimity," and "continued dissensions." There was also "misconduct in several of the non-commissioned officers of superior grade," "under the influence of the baneful example of superior officers, two seniors included, who neglected the simplest yet most essential cavalry duties." The British Commander-in-Chief says, that with the exception of one or two individuals when off duty or at mess, the regiment, until Colonel Shute was succeeded by Colonel Crawley, was "in the highest state of discipline." What must the army in India think of these conflicting decisions between high authorities?

"Who shall decide when doctors disagree?"

What impression will be made upon the Native mind by such striking diversities of opinion, such opposite decisions amongst Europeans in high places?

The greatest military authority in India has committed himself to false conclusions because he had not made himself sufficiently acquainted with the matters on which he had to pass a judgment, and has exposed himself to a reprimand published to every regiment in the army which he commands; and the greatest military authority at home has been attacked both in Parliament and by the press for permitting an officer to continue in charge of a regiment whose discipline and unanimity he has quite destroyed by "outraging the feelings of the gentlemen under his command." "Alas! with what little wisdom is the world governed." Every one will attribute the inconsistency of the Duke of Cambridge to the collision or conflict between his kindness of nature and his honest judgment. He saw Crawley's faults and characterised them truly, but he could not bring himself to pass even a just sentence upon the delinquent when he felt that it would be the man's utter ruin. But such tenderness to the individual is an injustice to the public, and a dereliction of duty.

A second desultory conversation on the subject was carried on in the House of Commons on Friday last. Mr. Coningham introduced the subject, and did not hesitate to assert that not Colonel Crawley and Sir William Mansfield, the Commander-in-Chief at Bombay, only, but Sir Hugh Rose, and even his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge himself, ought to be compelled to explain and to justify, if they can, their own shares in this most wretched business; for if the officers and men of the army are led to believe that such gross and horrible cruelty and injustice as were perpetrated by Colonel Crawley, even under cover of superior authority, are to escape the severest punishment, it must naturally create distrust and dissatisfaction through all ranks of the service.

Lord Palmerston appealed to Mr. Coningham to drop the subject for the present, because his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief had resolved to bring Colonel Crawley to a court-martial, though this will certainly be in some degree a measure of self-condemnation on the part of his Royal Highness, who has been forced to acknowledge the necessity of it by the indignant comments of the press, there being but one opinion throughout the land as to the extreme impropriety of keeping the ill-conducted and condemned colonel in the false position of a probationary commander. If Colonel Crawley could not secure the respect and obedience of those under him when he enjoyed the confidence of those in authority over himself, how could he be expected to do so after a severe official and public censure for the exhibition of a want of tact and temper, and for other more serious matters of which his highest superior "could not speak in terms too strong?"

When Messrs. Thorndike and Smith, the solicitors of Mr. Samuel Lilley, the brother of the cruelly persecuted sergeant-major—literally persecuted to death—applied for information on the subject of the proceedings in this case in India, they were bandied backwards and forwards between the Horse Guards and the War Office, and could obtain no satisfactory answers. Both departments denied having received the official reports from India. The solicitors commenced their correspondence on the 2nd of February, 1863, and it ended on the 21st of March of the same year in a brief note from the Secretary of State for War to the effect that "he had taken the necessary steps for obtaining from India an official report upon this subject, and that when that report shall have been received he will not fail to give the whole question his attentive consideration."

The following letter to Messrs. Thorndike and Smith from Major-general Foster, Military Secretary to his Royal Highness the Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, is dated Horse Guards, 10th February, 1863. The date is important:—

"Gentlemen,—Having submitted to the Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief your letter of the 2nd inst., applying for inspection and copies of the official correspondence with the military authorities at Mhow, respecting the arrest, imprisonment, and death of the late regimental Sergeant-major Lilley, 6th Inniskilling Dragoons, in the month of May, 1862, and also the two medical reports and post mortem examination of the deceased, and the verdict and proceedings at the coroner's inquest, and stating that you have been informed that the medical reports to which you allude, or copies of them, are now in the hands of the Inspector-general of the Army Medical Department in this country, I am directed by his Royal Highness to acquaint you that none of the documents to which you refer, or copies of them, appear to have been received either at the Horse Guards, or at the Army Medical Department, where enquiry has been made.—I have the honour to be, gentlemen, your obedient servant,

"W. F. FOSTER."

It was, of course, the duty of the Bombay authorities to forward the important documents referred to to the Horse Guards, to the War Office, or to the India Office in London, and, in fact, on or before the 3rd of March, 1863, after the solicitors had written five letters successively, it was discovered that there were the two medical reports and post mortem examination at the latter office. Why were not enquiries, in the first instance, made at the India Office? This correspondence with the solicitors, it will be observed, commenced subsequently to the date of the Memorandum of his Royal Highness the Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief. That Memorandum is dated December 18, 1862. The first letter of the solicitors' addressed to the Military Secretary of his Royal Highness is dated February 2, 1863. If his Royal Highness had received "none of the documents" referred to by the solicitors—nothing respecting "the arrest, imprisonment, and death" of Lilley—how came he to censure Sir Hugh Rose's decision as erroneous, because he, Sir Hugh Rose, had not made himself "better acquainted with the facts of the case?" If he had been better informed, says his Royal Highness, "his Excellency would not have attributed the sergeant-major's death to excesses." How was it that his Royal Highness did not himself require to see the documents asked for by the solicitors, before his review of the whole proceedings, and the publication of his judgment upon the case?

The letter of the Secretary of State for War promising to send to India "for an official report on this subject" was written a quarter of a year after his Royal Highness had published his Memorandum from the Horse Guards, and only one week subsequent to a notice from the solicitors, that they were entitled, by the Articles of War, to ask for the removal of Colonel Crawley from her Majesty's service for an illegal confinement of the late sergeant-major, which ended in his death, and a candid avowal or notice that they should advise the relatives of the late sergeant-major to indict Colonel Crawley for manslaughter, should he ever return to this country. Certainly the military authorities have got themselves into a sad mess, which would be nothing in some continental countries, but which is a serious affair in this land of freedom and law and constitutional Government.*

* The Duke of Cambridge has given an explanation in the House of Lords as to his own conduct in this affair. The report of it will be found in another column. It will be seen that his Royal Highness acknowledges that when he penned his Memorandum he was imperfectly acquainted with the facts of the case as they referred to Lilley. He observes that the Commander-in-Chief in India had charge of the discipline of the army there, and it was not usual for the Commander-in-Chief in London to revise the decisions of the Indian chief, or, as was the case with British officers at home, to refer a sentence of dismissal from the service to the Queen. His Royal Highness ought to have remembered that this difference refers to times past, when the army in India belonged not to the Crown, but to the East India Company. All officers in India are now on the same footing in relation to the Crown as their brethren at home, and the same rules should apply to Colonel Crawley, as we have seen, is at last to be brought to a court-martial. It cannot be disputed that we owe this too long delayed act of justice to the free press of England, and the force of public opinion in a free country. The highest officers in the State dare not, in this land, and in these days, defy the will of the community, nor can they outrage its feelings with impunity. It was clearly the duty of His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief, after "having perused the proceedings of the court-martial on Captain Smales," and "having had under his consideration not only these proceedings, but many facts bearing on them" (we quote his own words), to have done that of his own accord which public opinion has now forced upon him. Though he did not then know all the facts, he knew, at least, as much as ought to have satisfied him that if Colonel Crawley was not to be at once deprived of his command or cashiered, he ought at least to have been brought to a court-martial with the least possible delay. Indeed, any officer who should deserve such a reprimand and disgrace as his Royal Highness inflicted upon Colonel Crawley was clearly unfit to have charge of a regiment or even to hold a commission in her Majesty's service. We mean no disrespect to his Royal Highness individually. Everyone knows that he is honourable, humane, generous and well-intentioned. But his kindness of nature has, in this instance, interfered with his performance of a duty. A Commander-in-Chief who has to deal with the Crawleys of the service should be made of sterner stuff. His Royal Highness is a little too gentle for them. The Colonel of the Inniskilling Dragoons would not have got off quite so easily if the great Iron Duke had been still at the head of the army.

There is one circumstance relating to this case which is not generally known, but which is calculated to add fuel to the fire of public indignation. The sergeant-major had left his poor wife the sum of 500 rupees, or £50. The dying widow left that money to her husband's aged parents. The old father's son-in-law applied to the authorities at the War Office in their name for this money. The answer was that the wife had survived her husband, consequently the War Office had nothing to do with the matter. A soldier's widow had no claim upon them. "They had only to do with the soldier," was the hard official reply. Yet the widow of poor Lilley, when she left the little legacy—all she had—to her husband's parents, was in the Royal barracks, and was presumed to be under regimental care, and it is said that there is an officer in the War Office whose special duty it is to look after the property of deceased soldiers; but it seems that when the soldier has fought his last fight, his surviving widow is an object of no consideration whatever, and she may be robbed of her little inheritance, without one hand being raised for her protection. Her last wishes and the little property she may leave behind her are not objects of consideration at the War Office. Every soldier sent out to India costs the country a hundred pounds. It is necessary to take care of that valuable living property. But his widow cannot offer herself as food for powder and shot. The War Office has nothing to do with her. She is useless to the State, and so the State does not care to be of use to her, even out of respect for the memory of a husband who may have been a brave soldier, who may have won for himself an honourable reputation, and who may have been ever ready to shed his blood in the service of his Queen and country.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

THE SUEZ CANAL.—FORCED LABOUR.

In reply to a question from Mr. GRIFFITH, Viscount PALMERSTON said her Majesty's Government had not received the statement from Mr. Lesseps alluded to by the hon. member. But with regard to the main question, the prohibition of forced labour, the Sultan, who had long prohibited forced labour in the other portions of his dominions, had an equal right to do so in Egypt, which was part of his empire; and no foreigner, whether engaged in commercial speculation or an agent of a foreign Government, was justified in obstructing the Sultan in carrying out such a law. Of course her Majesty's Government would give the Sultan every support in carrying out that law.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT OF THE INDIAN ARMY.

In reply to Mr. M'Evoy,

Sir C. Wood said he was not aware whether the amalgamation had been yet settled, and whether there would be any objection on the part of the War Office to produce the terms of the arrangement.

CASES OF SERGEANT-MAJOR LILLEY AND PAYMASTER SMALES.

Lord PALMERSTON then appealed to Mr. Coningham, in whose name a notice stood on the paper to call attention to the memorandum of the Commander-in-Chief on the case of Sergeant-Major Lilley, not to proceed with the notice that evening. He said that when the subject had been under discussion a few nights before, his noble friend the Under-Secretary for War had stated that there were circumstances still under consideration in connection with the conduct of Colonel Crawley in the matter which might lead to subsequent measures. His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief had, he added, arrived at the conclusion that there were circumstances connected with the arrest of Sergeant-Major Lilley which would render it justifiable and which required that the course taken by Colonel Crawley in the transaction should be submitted to a court-martial—(hear, hear). A judicial proceeding having thus been determined on, he would submit to his hon. friend whether it would not be better that no discussion should that evening take place, which by eliciting the expression of opinion adverse or favourable to the person implicated, might tend in some degree to interfere with the course of justice—(hear, hear).

Mr. CONINGHAM said he should have great pleasure in acceding to the request of the noble lord, but that he thought the case of Sergeant-Major Lilley was merely part of a larger question which involved the court-martial held on Paymaster Smales at Mhow. It was only that very day that he had received many of the documents connected with that proceeding, and he must observe that while the noble lord the Under-Secretary for War had the other evening expressed his regret that he could not deliver up to the House a victim, he was unwilling, having made himself acquainted with the details given in these papers, to rest satisfied with simply being presented with a scape goat, for it was, in his opinion, not Colonel Crawley only who was compromised in the matter. Two general officers in India, the Commander-in-Chief in India, as well as the Commander-in-Chief of the British army and other officials at the Horse Guards, were also deeply and gravely implicated—"hear, hear," and "oh, oh!" Was it not monstrous, he would ask, that Paymaster Smales, for writing what was characterized as an insubordinate letter—the insubordination of which was, he must confess, to him by no means so patent as had been stated—should have been sent before a court-martial in the manner in which he had been without any previous investigation, and the witnesses actually impounded who were in readiness to support his case? Why the whole proceeding was perfectly disgraceful—(hear, hear).

General PEEL rose to order, observing that the hon. gentleman had simply given notice of his intention to bring under the consideration of the House the case of Sergeant-Major Lilley, and suggesting that under those circumstances it was not open to him to discuss the case of the court-martial held on Paymaster Smales, with reference to which he had given no notice.

Sir P. O'BRIEN maintained that his hon. friend was not out of order in adopting the course which he had taken. The real question at issue was whether Sir H. Rose was to be supported by the Horse Guards or not.

The SPEAKER having ruled that there was nothing contrary to order in the observations made,

Mr. CONINGHAM proceeded to say that the interruption of the right hon. gentleman the member for Huntingdon was entirely in accordance with the whole conduct of the military authorities in the cause to which he was drawing attention. They were all for suppression; but so long as he had the honour of a seat in that House he would not allow so monstrous an outrage to be perpetrated without protesting against it—(hear), and ("Oh, oh!") In the name of the officers, non-commissioned officers, and private soldiers of the British army he demanded that justice should be done, even though the persons to whom blame attached in the transaction were general officers, and included among their number his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief of the army—"oh, oh!" It had been said that the House of Commons was a house of colonels, and one would think from the groans of those who sat opposite that their sympathies were enlisted on the side of men who had, deliberately and in cold blood, acted in the manner to which he was about more particularly to advert—"oh, oh!" The question was one in which he thought the House was bound to interfere. He might be told it was merely a question of discipline, and that the poor paymaster who had been tried by court-martial might be crushed with impunity; but he ventured to maintain that, when the details of the court-martial were brought to light, its decision would not be confirmed by public opinion in this country—(hear). By a brief reference to those details, he hoped to satisfy the House that the justice of the case called for a rigid and searching investigation of the conduct of the distinguished officers to whom he alluded. He would summon his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief himself to the bar of a tribunal, where he would be judged not, perhaps, by his equals, but by those who would not stand by and see injustice done though screened by great names. What was the nature of the charge based upon the letter addressed by Paymaster Smales to Colonel Crawley? The hon. member then proceeded to read the letter in question, which was dated "Mhow, February 26, 1862." The writer began by expressing a hope that he would be excused for troubling the colonel with "a respectful remonstrance," and spoke of the painful position in which he was placed owing to the course pursued towards him by his commanding officer.

Colonel NORTH (interrupting the reading of the letter) said,—I must rise to order. I will ask whether it is fair that the hon. member should produce the proceedings of a court-martial about which the House knows nothing? No one has learnt with more horror than I did the painful circumstances connected with these transactions—(cries of "Order").

The SPEAKER: The hon. and gallant member must confine himself to the matter of order.

them all equally, without reference to their different localities. The Royal Duke's explanation in the House of Lords does not enable us to reconcile the apparent contradiction between the statement in the Memorandum that his Royal Highness had "perused the proceedings" of the too famous court-martial at Mhow, and had also under consideration "many facts bearing on them," and his implication that he knew the circumstances of the Lilley case better than the Commander-in-Chief in India, with the positive assertion, in his secretary's letter of a subsequent date, that "none of the documents" referred to by the solicitors, Messrs. Thorndike and Smith, "had been received at the Horse Guards."

Colonel NORRIS: I wish to know, sir, whether it is competent for the hon. member for Brighton to read the record of the proceedings about which we know nothing, and on which no one can have the means of answering him.

The SPEAKER: I have already said that the mere fact of the hon. member not having included this subject on his notice does not place him out of order. It is perfectly competent for him to bring a matter of this kind before the House without notice on the motion for going into Supply.

General PEEL: What I asked was whether the hon. gentleman had a right to quote from a document not in possession of the House—"order!"

Mr. CONINGHAM continued: He would remind the right hon. gentleman that the Minister of the Crown was in possession, or ought to be, of all the correspondence on this subject. The hon. member then resumed the reading of passages from Paymaster Smales's letter. The writer spoke of Colonel Crawley's personal animosity towards him, and submitted to his consideration whether his respectful conduct towards his commanding officer was reciprocated by that officer's conduct towards himself. The letter (said the hon. member) went on in the same respectful tone, but he would content himself by simply reading the portions mentioned in the charge against Captain Smales. Captain Smales was arraigned for insubordination in having written an official letter to his commanding officer containing "false and malicious statements" against him, such as that he had almost systematically absented himself from the monthly muster of the regiment; that notwithstanding his absence on certain occasions he had signed the adjutant's roll as if he had been present; and that the sentiments he had expressed more than once to the officers under his command were anything but conciliatory in their tendency. When put upon his trial Paymaster Smales brought forward a protest against the legality of the proceedings taken against him, and in that protest he submitted that her Majesty's regulations, clearly laying down that all charges preferred against an officer were to be previously examined by superior authority, to ascertain whether there was sufficient evidence to substantiate them or not, had been violated to his prejudice; for he had been accused of making false and malicious statements, without any reference being made to him as to the evidence he was prepared to adduce in support of them, and without his being allowed an opportunity of proving his accusations against Colonel Crawley, before the counter charge, based upon ex parte evidence and Colonel Crawley's own simple denial, was preferred against himself. The protest also alleged that Colonel Crawley sought to smother the accusation made against himself in the first instance by bringing a counter charge against his accuser; and that he could not be heard while Colonel Crawley appeared as a prosecutor and he as a prisoner. He submitted, on the quotations he had made from the protest of Paymaster Smales, and on the facts which were now known to the public, and which were corroborated by the memorandum issued by the Horse Guards, that the mere trial of Colonel Crawley would not meet the justice of the case. A searching investigation should be instituted into the conduct of the distinguished officers in India who were too deeply mixed up in these transactions. It was idle to attempt to burk an inquiry which was required in the interest of the British army, for the House might depend upon it that if non-commissioned officers were liable to be treated as Sergeant-Major Lilley and his comrades had been treated, with the sanction of high military authority, there would be great dissatisfaction throughout the ranks of the service. The delinquents, no matter how eminent their position or how high their birth, should be made to feel that they could not escape from justice. He appealed to the noble lord at the head of the Government not to make a scapegoat of Colonel Crawley, but to order an immediate investigation into the conduct of every one concerned in this discreditable and disgraceful affair—(hear, hear).

The Marquis of HARTINGTON said that although the Speaker had decided that the hon. member for Brighton was in order in the observations he had addressed to the House, there would, he thought, be hardly any difference of opinion as to the good taste displayed by the hon. gentleman in his remarks upon the trial of Paymaster Smales. The notice given by the hon. member was to call attention to the memorandum of the Commander-in-Chief on the case of Sergeant-Major Lilley. Now, it was perfectly true that the case of Sergeant-Major Lilley arose out of the circumstances which occurred on the trial of Paymaster Smales, and it might, therefore, be proper to have a discussion upon that trial, although he doubted whether the House of Commons ought to interfere with the discipline of the army; but he was perfectly sure that the hon. member for Brighton, especially considering the terms of his notice, had no right to enter into statements affecting the character of officers who were not present to defend themselves—(hear, hear). For example, the Commander-in-Chief was not present, and those whose business it would be to defend him in that House had not had an opportunity of preparing themselves to repel any charge which might be made against him. He therefore declined to follow the hon. gentleman in his observations upon the trial of Paymaster Smales and the conduct of the Commander-in-Chief. All he would say was that in his judgment—and he was corroborated by the opinion of the Judge-Advocate General—the letter of Paymaster Smales was a document highly insubordinate in its character, and that it fully warranted his dismissal from the regiment. He was at a loss to discover the grounds of the violent attack made by the hon. member on the Commander-in-Chief, for the fact was, that the finding of the court-martial in the case of Paymaster Smales never came before his Royal Highness for his sanction at all, it being a matter which rested solely with the Commander-in-Chief in India. In his memorandum his Royal Highness made, as he was entitled to do, such observations as appeared to him proper upon the state of discipline in the regiment as disclosed in the proceedings before the court-martial, but he did not interfere with the finding of the Court. The House had already been informed of the grounds upon which the Commander-in-Chief and the Secretary for War thought it impossible to bring Colonel Crawley to trial for the illegal arrest of Sergeant-Major Lilley, or to proceed against the general officers in any other way than by calling their attention to the illegality of their conduct. There were certain circumstances connected with the arrest of Sergeant-Major Lilley, for which Colonel Crawley had not received the sanction of his commanding officers, and which materially affected his conduct. It was stated, and he believed truly, that Sergeant-Major Lilley was confined in a manner which was not only severe, but cruel. Colonel Crawley denied that he was responsible for that cruelty, and threw the blame upon Captain Fitz Symons. Captain Fitz Symons had made a distinctly opposite allegation, and it had therefore appeared to the authorities that discipline and justice, and even fairness to Colonel Crawley, required that he should be summoned before a court-martial, which should decide who was responsible for this cruelty. He would not further follow the observations of the hon. member for Brighton, but he fully concurred in the observations of the noble lord, that it was most improper and undesirable that when a judicial inquiry was about to take place there should be warm and excited discussions in that House, which could not fail to affect the impartiality of the tribunal which was to try the question.

Colonel NORRIS said that he had risen to order because he thought that it was most unfair to Colonel Crawley, with whom he had no acquaintance whatever, that matters which were about to be inquired into by a court-martial should be made the subject of discussion in that House, and he was surprised that the hon. member for Brighton, who was himself an old soldier, should not have taken the same view of the case. No one had heard of these occurrences with greater astonishment and regret than he had, and he could only say that if a commanding officer who had power to make his regiment the most comfortable and pleasant of homes made it a hell upon earth, the sooner he was dismissed the better—(hear). At present, however, they did not know that Colonel Crawley had done so. They were in perfect ignorance of the facts. The hon. gentleman had read extracts from the proceedings of the court-martial, but he believed that no other hon. member had had an opportunity of seeing them. The Commander-in-Chief in India was one of his oldest and dearest friends, and he was convinced that in the view which he had taken of the finding of the court-martial he had been guided solely by a desire to secure the interests, the discipline, and the honour of the army. The Commander-in-Chief in India was entirely independent of the Commander in Chief in this country, and he regretted that the hon. gentleman should the other night have been so anxious to cast obloquy upon his Royal Highness as to attack him without hearing the noble lord who had come down to the House to explain the memorandum which the hon. gentleman now called in question.

Sir P. O'BRIEN thought if gross outrages were committed it was the duty of hon. members, if requested to do so, to make in that House the statements of officers who were aggrieved. The general opinion of his military friends was that the state of this regiment was such as to render it necessary that the Horse Guards should make some change in its administration.

Lord PALMERSTON: I cannot help expressing my great regret at the course which my hon. friend has adopted—(hear). He professes to stand up for justice, but he has himself been guilty of the grossest injustice—(hear), and has launched out into abuse and condemnation of the Commander-in-Chief without the slightest ground or reason—(hear). I am quite sure, at least I hope, that when he returns to the calm state of mind in which I hope that he will find himself in the morning, and reads the expressions in which, in the heat and warmth of debate, taking the part of his friend, Paymaster Smales [Mr. Coningham: "He is no friend of mine"], he has indulged, in reference to his Royal Highness, he will feel regret for what he has said. The Duke of Cambridge stands too high in the estimation of the country and of the army for the admirable attention which he has paid to the interests of the service, and the justice with which he has acted in all that concerns the conduct of the army, to have his character or reputation in the least degree affected by the censures of my hon. friend the member for Brighton; but I felt that I should not have performed my duty if I had not animated upon the course which my hon. friend has thought fit to take. I can assure him that I regret very much that expressions have fallen from him which will do no discredit to his Royal Highness, against whom they were directed, but will not do much credit to him in the opinion of a discerning and just public—(hear).

Mr. BOUVIERE thought that the course taken and the language used by the hon. member for Brighton were enough to satisfy the House of the prudence of the advice given to him by the noble lord. The hon. member had really attempted to make the House of Commons a court of appeal from the decision of a court-martial—(hear),—selected, no doubt, with a due reference to the characters of the officers composing it, and having the evidence before it. This was a more serious matter than the hon. gentleman seemed to think. Our empire in India depended upon the efficiency and discipline of our army, which would not long be maintained if every time there was a regimental court-martial an appeal was to be made to that House to reverse its decision. The hon. member had strongly condemned the conduct of Sir H. Rose, but had not condescended upon any particulars. He should like to know in what respect that most distinguished and gallant officer had failed in his duty to the public or the army. The proceedings of the court-martial were submitted to him, and he himself passed an opinion upon them, as he was bound to do. A more unwise, imprudent, more unfair, and more harsh course than that taken by the hon. gentleman the member for Brighton could not well be adopted—(hear). His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief had taken what every one must regard as a very proper course, and in justice to Colonel Crawley, who was an old servant of her Majesty of thirty or forty years' standing, the public were bound to wait and see if he could clear himself from the imputations which behind his back had been so lavishly cast upon him.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—JUNE 15.

LIEUT.-COLONEL CRAWLEY AND SERGEANT-MAJOR LILLEY.

The Earl of SHAFTESBURY: My lords, though I have given notice of my intention to put a question to the Secretary of State for War relating to the case of Lieut.-colonel Crawley and Sergeant-major Lilley, I do not intend to introduce it with any preliminary observations. I have no official knowledge of the matter, and I must be very careful in saying anything, or making any statement that may raise groundless suspicions, or lead to an unjust judgment; but at the same time, my lords, I think you will admit that, whether right or wrong, no more frightful picture than this has ever been brought before the eyes of the British public; and I must say that, so far as I can judge, what has taken place hitherto is most unsatisfactory, and that, I believe, is the judgment of the public at large. This, my lords, is a matter of the highest importance, not only to the safety and discipline of the army, but to the honour of this country, both as regards itself and in respect to the estimation in which it is held among foreign nations. I do not recollect a matter which has more profoundly moved the feelings of the people of England. They are most anxious that further information should be given, that the whole matter should be searched to the very foundation, and that the truth should be laid before the world. I now merely ask the Secretary of State for War whether it is the intention of her Majesty's Government to institute any further inquiry into the case of Lieut.-colonel Crawley and Sergeant-major Lilley?

The Duke of CAMBRIDGE: My lords, before my noble friend the Secretary of State for War replies to the question which has been put by the noble earl, I think your lordships will permit me to interpose, in order that I may make one or two observations, not with reference to the circumstances connected with the court martial on the late Paymaster Smales, nor in regard to anything that may hereafter occur, if it should be found necessary to have a court-martial on Lieut.-colonel Crawley, but so much has been said as to the position which I fill, and the line I have taken with regard to this melancholy proceeding, that it is right your lordships and the country should know the exact relative position in which I, filling the high position I have the honour to occupy, stand in reference to Commanders-in-Chief in India, and, in short, how I stand as to the whole matter. It may probably not be known to your lordships that the conduct and discipline of the army in India rest entirely with the Commander-in-Chief in India, and that so far as my supervision extends, I stand merely in the position of a referee, to whom a last appeal comes, but so seldom is the appeal exercised, that I believe there is no instance—at least, it must be a very distant one—when there was any interference on the part of the Commander-in-Chief in England as regards any court-martial which has taken place in India. To this extent does that go, that when the Commander-in-Chief in this country submits to her Majesty the name of any officer who has been tried by a court-martial, and who has been cashiered, the actual cashiering does not take place until the Queen's pleasure has been taken; but the fiat of the Commander-in-Chief in India is absolute, and there is no reference to her Majesty in this country at all; but as I have taken notice of this proceeding, the noble lord may say, "Then why did you take notice of it at all?" I will explain that to your lordships as shortly as I can. No doubt, as I have before said, that as far as my supervision extends, it is merely the position of referee—the position of last appeal from the Commander-in-Chief in India. When a court-martial takes place in India the circumstances are reported to the Commander-in-Chief at home, in order that he may know how to act upon such proceedings. The report of the court-martial itself is transmitted to the Judge Advocate-general in England, and he forwards it to the Commander-in-Chief, who has an opportunity of looking into the proceedings. He then merely returns it as a record to the Judge Advocate-general's office. When these proceedings came to my knowledge, I must confess that I felt exactly as the noble lord opposite did, that there was something very peculiar and most singular in such proceedings, and they struck me to be so remarkable, that I thought it right that the course which had been adopted should be reviewed by the Commander-in-Chief at home, and his opinion taken. Having arrived at that conclusion, how was I to act? Was I to remove the officer chiefly implicated in the charge or not? In reviewing this case it was certainly evident that very unfortunate and melancholy circumstances had occurred, but at the same time I must frankly say it was only very recently that the real circumstances have come to light, and it is because at the time my memorandum was drawn up I felt I was not in full possession of all the facts of the case, and that although I knew the general outline, there were many things left behind which I felt must afterwards come out, that I abstained from expressing a very decided and positive opinion upon the whole case, and reserved myself until I should be satisfied on various points on which I then entertained considerable doubt, before I took the extreme step of removing the commanding officer from the command of his regiment. It has been said that the reason why no action was taken was that two eminent men were concerned in the transaction—of course I allude to Sir Hugh Rose and Sir William Mansfield. There is no doubt that those two eminent men and distinguished officers were concerned, and the question that arose was, were they concerned in such a manner as that I was called on to take action with regard to them. I most positively and conscientiously believe that these two distinguished officers have had every desire to do that which was right, but that they committed a very serious error of judgment. That is my conviction; and I believe that this will be found to be the case. But even in the case of the irregularity of that imprisonment to which considerable importance is attached, that irregularity was not known to me when my memorandum was written. It is only recently that it has come to my knowledge, and it was utterly impossible to decide upon the case, when really and truly I did not know all the circumstances. I cannot, for one moment, suppose that there can be any personal feeling in this matter with regard to two such eminent men as Sir Hugh Rose and Sir William Mansfield. Not merely their military reputation, but their high character in various high positions which they have filled, led me to think that if they had erred, it was no more than an error of judgment, and certainly not from a desire to do what was cruel or unjust. That, no doubt, had weight with me, and I appeal to your lordships whether it ought not to have had its weight with me—(hear). Would any official person be justified in coming to a rash conclusion on so very delicate a position? The result of this, I hope, will be to prove that I have not acted so undecidably as I am accused of acting. Because, what occurred? Why, at a very recent period, circumstances have come to my knowledge which render it not only possible, but necessary, that we should bring to court-martial Lieutenant-Colonel Crawley. I am not going to enter into that case which is pending. It is pending a judicial trial; but the circumstances to which I allude have only come to my knowledge quite recently. It is only within a few days—within a week, or it may be ten days—that I have been in a position to advise that that trial should take place on the merits of the case. A great deal of time has elapsed since this case arose. I may be asked why? I answer, the whole of these occurrences took place in India.

It takes three months to communicate with India—at least, it takes three months to write to India and obtain an answer. We have hardly had a single paper from India on the subject that has not required a reply, or rather a fresh question on our part and a fresh reply from India. The result of this going backwards and forwards, with three months' interval between, is to protract these unfortunate proceedings for a longer time than I could wish or your lordships expect. A still further delay must occur on this account. Sir William Mansfield, under whom the regiment is serving in Bombay, is stationed in Bombay. As regards the Queen's troops, they are under the command in chief of the general officer at Bengal. The consequence is that all these questions must come officially from Bombay to Bengal before they come to us officially in England. That adds to the delay. I felt bound to point this out to your lordships in order to show you that whatever has been done has not been done with a view to screen anybody, but with a strict and earnest desire to do justice to all. Not alone to do justice to the general feelings of distress at the painful circumstances which have occurred, and which are most natural, but to do justice to those who have been implicated, and to whom I am sure your lordships would wish to give every possible opportunity of defending and justifying themselves, if it is possible for them to do so. That is the only feeling I have; and as for saying that there has been any pressure put upon me, of course I spurn the idea; but it does happen that the question was never discussed by me with a single individual, except in the most official manner, and then only with one on whom I was able to rely for advice in forming a sound, just, and safe conclusion—(hear, hear).

Earl DE GREY and RUPON said that the speech of his Royal Highness relieved him of the necessity of saying more than a few words. As their lordships had been informed, it was the intention of his Royal Highness to bring Lieutenant-Colonel Crawley to a court-martial for the circumstances attending the death of Sergeant-Major Lilley. The precise nature of those charges were matters now under the consideration of the authorities, and it would be improper for him to express any opinion on the subject. Every step would be taken to ensure that the inquiry should be conducted in the most open manner, and with perfect fairness to all parties concerned.

The Earl of SHAFTESBURY trusted the inquiry would be carried on in England, and not transferred to India, where, in fact, it had already been prejudged by the allegation that Sergeant-Major Lilley's death was the result of habitual intoxication.

The Earl of MALMESBURY said he had that day seen a letter from Sir Hugh Rose, stating that his assertion to the effect just mentioned was grounded upon the statement of the surgeon of the quantity of spirits supplied to Sergeant-Major Lilley while under arrest.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—JUNE 15.

JAPAN.

Mr. LIDDELL asked the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs what was the precise nature of the demands made by her Majesty's Government upon the Government of Japan, in the shape of reparation for outrages committed upon British subjects in that country; and, whether there was any objection to state what instructions had been sent to the British Admiral on the station as to the steps to be taken in the event of the Tycoon's refusal to comply with those demands. As the matter was one of very great importance the hon. member wished also to ask whether her Majesty's Government had any good grounds for supposing that the Tycoon had power, even supposing that he had the will, to demand reparation from a powerful chief like the Prince, by whose followers the crime had been perpetrated.

Mr. LAYARD said that some months ago a murderous attack had been made upon four British subjects who were riding on a highway near Jeddo which had been opened to foreigners by treaty. Mr. Richardson was killed, two other gentlemen were seriously wounded, and a lady escaped almost by a miracle. Her Majesty's Government had demanded from the Japanese an ample and formal apology for this outrage. They had also demanded that £100,000 should be paid by the Government of Japan as a penalty for this offence. His hon. friend had asked whether the Tycoon had power to enforce reparation from a powerful Daimio like the Prince, whose followers, headed by his father, had committed the offence. Her Majesty's Government had demanded that punishment should be inflicted upon that chief, and that the persons implicated in the outrage should be taken, tried, and executed in the presence of one or more British officers—(laughter). Further, they had demanded that a sum of £25,000 should be paid by the Prince as compensation to the family of those who had suffered in the assault. Whether the Japanese Government had power to enforce these demands upon the Prince he could not state, but he should know when the Government received intelligence from Japan. There was a still further demand upon the Tycoon. On June 26 last two marines were murdered while on guard at the British Embassy. For that her Majesty's Government had demanded £10,000, as compensation for the families of the victims. He could not, of course, state what instructions had been given to our admiral, but he trusted that they would be of a nature to enforce the demands of her Majesty's Government.

THE CASE OF PAYMASTER SMALES.

Mr. CONINGHAM gave notice that, on an early day, on going into Committee of Supply, he should bring under the consideration of the House the court-martial at Mhow, on Paymaster Smales, and move a resolution with reference to it—(hear).

HOUSE OF LORDS.—JUNE 18.

THE NAVY IN INDIA.

The Duke of SOMERSET, in reply to questions put by the Earl of Ellenborough, was understood to say that five large vessels of the Royal navy, and four small ones for river service, would be placed upon the Indian station. The Governor-General of India would have the power of directing the proceedings of these vessels when he should consider it necessary.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—JUNE 18.

THE INDIAN FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

In reply to Mr. A. MILLS,

Sir C. Wood said that, as far as he himself was concerned, he was perfectly prepared to make his financial statement with respect to India at once; but as the accounts were not yet in the hands of members, he could not name the day for making the statement.

THE COURT-MARTIAL ON PAYMASTER SMALES.

Mr. CONINGHAM asked the Under Secretary of State for War whether he would lay upon the table of the House a report of the court-martial on Paymaster Smales, of the 6th Dragoons, together with any paper or memorandum connected with the trial.

The Marquis of HARTINGTON said that the proceedings upon the court-martial had been already prominently before the House; and a great many unauthorised extracts from the evidence had been already made public. The subject had also been debated in that House; and the Speaker had decided that the hon. member for Brighton (Mr. Coningham) was in order in quoting from papers in his own possession, but not generally in possession of the House; and it was also true that the proceedings of the court-martial had been published in India. Under the circumstances, the Government had no objection to laying the papers relative to the proceedings in the court-martial upon the table, together with the observations of the Commander-in-Chief in India with respect to them. But he must add he hoped the House would not be disposed to regard the course taken by the Government upon that occasion in the light of a precedent, or to admit the principle that it was in any way expedient in ordinary cases for this House to constitute itself a court of criticism upon the proceedings of courts-martial—(hear).

Mr. CONINGHAM asked when the papers would be laid upon the table.

THE INDIAN ARMY.

In reply to Captain JERTIS,

Sir C. Wood said that in the case of an officer retiring upon half-pay from one of the new line regiments a step would be given in the regiment to which he belonged. Officers of the late European cavalry in India for whom there had been no vacancies in the new hussar regiments would return to their position in the Indian army, and be available for general duty.

ARRIVAL OF THE EXPLORERS OF THE NILE.

Captain Speke and Captain Grant, who have earned a place in history by their discovery of the source of the Nile, are now in England. They arrived at Southampton on Wednesday last, on board the Pera, and were, as may be supposed, welcomed with enthusiasm. As soon as it was made known that the Pera had arrived, bringing the above gentlemen, the Mayor, F. Perkins, Esq., accompanied by the Town Clerk, on behalf of the Corporation, and Captain William Henry Jones, R.N., Colonel Rigby, Dr. Bullars, and other gentlemen, waited on Captains Speke and Grant, and presented them with the following address:—

"Gentlemen,—As Mayor of the town of Southampton, may I claim the honour of very briefly addressing you on behalf of the Corporation and inhabitants.

"It would ill beseem the representatives of an ancient seaport whose history is connected more or less with every period of the annals of England, to neglect an opportunity of most respectfully greeting travellers whose recent discoveries have solved the perplexing problem of all ages, by ascertaining the true source of one of the most wonderful rivers on the face of the earth.

"And it would be quite as unseemly in us either to attempt on such an occasion to speak of the value of your labours, or to detain you thus happily restored to your native shores, on the very threshold of that home which you may well be eager to reach; we beg leave therefore simply to be allowed to congratulate you on that Divine protection which has carried you unharmed through regions in which so many noble votaries of science have either fallen victims to pestiferous climates, or have perished by the hands of their savage inhabitants.

"Praise then be to God that we have the pleasure of seeing you safe in your own country, and honour be to that unflinching courage which no danger has daunted, no difficulties have discouraged. Long may you live to enjoy the honours which you have so bravely won."

The Mayor, with his usual hospitality, invited the renowned discoverers to a banquet, which they were compelled to decline, being under an engagement to wait upon the Geographical Society, but at the same time expressed the pleasure it would afford them to accept of his worship's invitation on a future occasion.

So widely felt is the interest which was displayed in the seaport of Southampton, and which, before many hours have past, will be demonstrated in a more extended arena, that we offer no apology for placing before our readers some personal account of these twin heroes of modern investigation. They are both stalwart men, above the average height, and possessing the well-knit frames of which the pick and flower of our army may be said physically to consist. It required, indeed, somewhat more than ordinary physique to undergo such immense hardships as, for three years, these two English gentlemen have unflinchingly borne. Before encountering the almost inconceivable difficulties of African travel, they had seen hard service in other parts of the world; and Captain Grant, we are informed, suffers even now from his old Indian wounds, more than from the effects of fever in Africa. He lost part of his hand at the siege of Lucknow, and has other marks of the memorable Sepoy rebellion. However, of the two officers Captain Grant appears at present the healthier, his companion having hardly recovered from an affection of the lungs which he suffered during part of his African wanderings.

These notable travellers, who have explored the Mountains of the Moon—as the clusters of hills are called which border the Lake Nyanza—and who have traced the source of the Nile to those acclivities over whose sides torrents of rain fall into the lake and cause the periodical flow of the stream, bring marvellous accounts of the fertility and natural wealth of regions through which they have passed. Cotton and every tropical product was seen by them, growing in lavish abundance; and vast accumulations of ivory strewed their route for very many leagues. Deserts, indeed, they met with, to the north as well as south of the Equator; but these arid tracts were of no great magnitude. Attended by gigantic savages of various tribes, whose photographs have been brought to this country among other trophies, Capt. Speke and Grant penetrated through obstacles which even their Zanzibar guides shrank from facing, till they reached the Lake Nyanza. To this wild spot Captain Speke had once before made his way; but his second journey was, from some causes, more arduous than the first. Both gentlemen were robbed of everything, and stripped nearly naked, by the barbarous people whom they encountered during their journey. Only a remnant of their followers proved faithful to them, and accompanied them as far as they travelled. They have brought home the skull and horns of a gigantic buffalo, which they shot near the Equator.

It is gratifying to state that, by the instructions of Earl Russell, the Custom-house authorities at Southampton passed the luggage of Captains Speke and Grant free; and that all possible facilities were afforded them for reaching London early in the day.

THE DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE UPON THE CASE OF SERGEANT-MAJOR LILLEY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "TIMES."

Sir,—In your otherwise correct report of my speech on the case of Sergeant-major Lilley, in your impression of the 16th inst., I observe an error which I should feel obliged by your correcting. I am made to say, "the result of that imprisonment was not known to me when my memorandum was written;" whereas I intended to convey to the House that the facts connected with that imprisonment were not known to me when my memorandum was written.—I am, sir, your obedient servant,

GEORGE.

Horse Guards, June 17.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SPIRITUAL COMMUNICATION FROM GOVERNOR WALL.—My name is Joseph Wall. I was Lieutenant-Governor of Goree, acting as Chief in July, 1782. I caused a man to be flogged without a trial. I ordered Sergeant Armstrong to receive eight hundred lashes. He died in five days afterwards. The Board of Admiralty offered a reward for my apprehension. I absconded, and went to live on the Continent; mostly in France and Italy. In 1797 I returned to England. I was taken up in 1802, twenty years after I had flogged Armstrong to death. I was tried, convicted, and hanged. Colonel Crawley is accused of having hastened the death of Sergeant-Major Lilley, if not of having killed him, by illegally confining him in a Black Hole. I won't say that Colonel Crawley murdered Sergeant-Major Lilley. I don't know that he did. Spirits never do know anything of the kind. We cannot tell who did the Road murder. We only know what the papers tell you. They say that Crawley committed a crime that amounts to murder. What they say is corroborated by the Duke of Cambridge. If it is true, Colonel Crawley ought to be tried for it. Should it be proved against him he would deserve hanging more than I did. The man I caused to be flogged was a mutineer among mutineers. He was not a respectable non-commissioned officer. Mrs. Brownrigg tells me to give you her compliments. Good night.—Punch.

COTTON FROM INDIA.—On the 3rd proximo Mr. Caird will move for a select committee to inquire whether any further measures can be taken within the legitimate functions of the Indian Government for increasing the supply of cotton from that country.

APPOINTMENTS.—(War-office, June 16.)—The Queen has been graciously pleased to give orders for the appointment of Rear-Admiral the Hon. Edward Alfred John Harris, Her Majesty's Minister Plenipotentiary to the Swiss Confederation; and Horatio Nelson Lay, Esq., employed with the special mission of the Earl of Elgin to China, in the years 1857 and 1858, to be Ordinary Members of the Civil Division of the Third Class, or Companions of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath. (Foreign-office, June 12.)—The Queen has been pleased to approve of Mr. Ludwig Wiese, as Consul at Victoria, Hong Kong, for His Majesty the King of Sweden and Norway.

DRAFTS ON INDIA.—The biddings for 30,000,000 rupees (£300,000) in bills on India took place on Wednesday last, at the Bank of England. The proportions allotted were:—To Calcutta, 16,00,000 rupees; to Bombay, 12,00,000 rupees; and to Madras, 2,00,000 rupees. The declared minimum price was as before, 1s. 11½d. per rupee on Calcutta, and 1s. 11½d. on Bombay and Madras. The applications within the limits were for about 120 lacs. Tenders on Calcutta at 1s. 11½d. will receive about 4 per cent.; on Bombay, at 1s. 11½d., about 6 per cent.; on Madras at 1s. 11½d., about 27 per cent., and all above these prices in full.

ASSAM TEA COMPANY.—At the annual meeting, on Friday, June 12, of the Assam Company, Mr. H. M. Kemshead in the chair, the report of the directors, recommending a dividend at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum, free of income-tax, was unanimously adopted. The chairman, in the course of his observations regarding the progress of the company's operations during the past twelve months, stated that the market value of the shares had risen from £30 in 1858 to £45 in 1863, and to £52 in India. He also stated that the quality of the tea had been greatly improved, and that the crops had increased from 770,432 lbs. in 1858 to 1,807,250 lbs. at the present time.

MAURITIUS GAS COMPANY.—The prospectus of the Mauritius Gas Company, a new undertaking, established for the purpose of supplying gas in that British possession, has just appeared. It is intended to commence operations in Port Louis, the capital of the colony, containing 75,000 inhabitants. A site for the company's works has already been purchased, and the co-operation of the municipal council has been secured. The company may boast of a very influential list of directors, and its proposed capital is £100,000, in shares of £5.

MAURITIUS GOVERNMENT DEBENTURES.—Mauritius Government Six per Cent. Debentures for £400,000, one-half in bonds having ten years to run, and the other half in bonds having fifteen years to run, were offered to public competition by the Agent-General for Crown Colonies to-day. The minimum declared at the opening for the former was 105, and for the latter 106½. The application for the ten years' bonds amounted altogether to £122,400, of which £107,800, ranging from 105 to 108½, was allotted, leaving £29,200 undisposed of. The application for the fifteen years bonds reached £209,200, of which £285,700 were at and above the minimum, and the whole £200,000 was disposed of, at prices ranging from £107. 3s. 6d. to £113. 2s. 6d. The Crown Agents intimated their willingness to treat the highest of the rejected tenders for the fifteen years bonds as applications for the balance of the ten years bonds, if the persons interested so desired.

THE EGYPTIAN COMMERCIAL AND TRADING COMPANY is the first undertaking introduced to the public under the auspices of the International Financial Society. It is also supported by Messrs. Fröhling and Goschen, London; Messrs. Marcuard, André, and Co., Paris; Mr. W. F. Jaeger, Frankfurt; Mr. S. Sulzbach, Frankfurt; Messrs. Appenheimer, Nephew, and Co., Alexandria; and Messrs. E. Dervien and Co., Alexandria. The capital is £2,000,000, in 100,000 shares of £20 each, but only 25,000 are offered to the public, the remainder having been already subscribed for in Egypt and elsewhere. The object is the development of commerce with Upper Egypt, Nubia, and Soudan, as well as the borders of the Red Sea, so as to establish trading relations with those districts. The Viceroy has granted subsidies for the purpose of affording increased facilities of communication, and on this account the assistance of the company now projected will, it is stated, be more than ever required. It is intended to make advances to cultivators to promote the production of cotton, and agencies are to be established on both coasts of the Red Sea.

TROOPS FOR INDIA.—Orders have been received from the Horse Guards by Major-general H. Eyre, commanding the troops at Chatham, directing the following reinforcements to be held in readiness to embark for India, for the purpose of reinforcing the various corps in the three presidencies:—2 officers and 36 non-commissioned officers and men of the 1st battalion 4th King's Own regiment; 60 non-commissioned officers and men of the 1st battalion 19th regiment; 62 men of all ranks of the 1st battalion 20th regiment; 40 non-commissioned officers and men of the 51st King's Own Light Infantry; 2 officers and 7 men of the 77th regiment; 10 men of the 91st regiment; and 2 officers and 187 non-commissioned officers and men of the 94th regiment. The whole of the above troops will embark at Gravesend on board the vessels chartered by the Hon. Council for India.

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA EXTENSION RAILWAY.—A prospectus has been issued of the Great Indian Peninsula Extension Railway Company for £1,000,000, in shares of £20 each, for the purpose of constructing and working branches to connect the main line with important centres of trade. The Government of India, it is said, recognises the desirability of such auxiliary lines.

EXPORT OF SPECIE.—The Poonah, which leaves to-morrow, with the Calcutta and China Mails, will carry £140,250 in specie.

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!!

C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times, C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Mordan, &c., at half the price of new. MR. EPHRAIM MOSELY'S IMPROVEMENT IN THE CONSTRUCTION OF ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, and PALATES, on an INDIA-RUBBER BASE, are secured by Letters Patent, dated December, 1852, whereby the continual outlay of new teeth is avoided, alterations from the absorption of the gums, or any other cause, being easily remedied, and the first outlay no greater than for ordinary kinds. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted as under:—It consists of one continuous piece of Prepared India-rubber. The Artificial Teeth present a uniformly even surface to the action of the tongue, preventing lodgment of food and all secretions, so much complained of in the present system. No gold or any other metal being required, all springs, wires, and fastenings are wholly unnecessary; sharp edges are avoided, a greatly increased freedom of suction is supplied, a natural elasticity hitherto wholly unattainable, and a fit perfected with the most unerring accuracy, are secured; while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums. The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the prepared india-rubber; and, as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may be retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being at the same time provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation.

EXTRACTS from the REPORT of the DIRECTORS for the year 1862, submitted to the Twenty-seventh General Meeting of Proprietors and Policyholders, held at Aberdeen, on the 13th day of June, 1863:—

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Revenue and Expenditure of the year.
Net Premiums received...	£127,946 2 7
Losses by fire (including all outstanding claims), commission to agents, and charges of management applicable to this branch...	95,688 13 6
Surplus ...	£32,257 9 1

Your Directors would call the attention of the shareholders to the fact that, notwithstanding a further loss of Revenue, through the discontinuance of the American business, amounting to upwards of £10,000, the premiums for 1862 show a considerable increase upon the preceding year. The net premiums for the year 1861 amounted to £115,854. 18s. 7d., while, as already shown, that amount is exceeded in 1862 by upwards of £12,000.

It must, however, be borne in mind, that the period embraced in the accounts for the year 1861 consisted of eleven months only, so that the increase is not so great as, at first sight, it appears; but, under the circumstances above referred to, the shareholders will probably consider it a very satisfactory advance.

Ever since the year 1853, when the Company took the important step of extending its business beyond the narrow limits of Scotland and certain districts in Ireland, to which, until then, it had been confined, it has been the good fortune of your Directors to find themselves, year after year, in a position to report an amount of progress such as very few of the fire offices of this country have achieved at any period of their history. In the year 1851-2 the whole revenue of the Company from fire premiums did not amount to £10,000. It is now nearly £130,000, or about 13 times the amount at which it stood 10 years ago, and the Company has in that period risen to occupy the seventh place (in point of income) on the list of the fire offices of the United Kingdom.

Nor is it only in respect of the magnitude of the Company's transactions that your Directors look back with satisfaction on the labours of the past ten years. While it is admitted on all hands that the business of Fire Insurance has, during the greater part of that period, been on the whole unprofitable to the offices, the Northern Company, notwithstanding occasional heavy losses, has always been able to show a considerable sum at the credit of its Reserve Fund. On the 31st January, 1861, this Fund stood at £47,131. 7s. 11d., but in consequence of the severe loss which the Company sustained by the great fire which occurred in London in June of that year, the Fund was reduced at its close to £22,490. 8s. 5d. After providing for all outstanding claims, the Fund will now stand at £55,784. 2s. 9d., a higher amount than it has reached at any time since the establishment of the Company.

Participation Fund ...	303,219 15 10
Annuity Fund ...	44,382 13 1
Total Life Funds ...	£467,982 16 3

Owing chiefly to the great advantages afforded by the Company to those who join the participating class of policyholders, in consequence of which comparatively few transactions find their way to the non-participating branch, the details of the progress of this department generally possess less interest for the shareholders than they do for the assured. Under these circumstances, it is to the latter that your Directors have, in the first instance, to offer their congratulations on the results of the year.

By comparing the foregoing with former reports it will be found that in 1862 a larger number of new entrants joined the participating branch than in any previous year. The claims by death were, at the same time, considerably lighter than the calculations of the office provided for; and the amount added to the accumulated fund is within a fraction of £30,000.

In the non-participating branch, which interests the proprietors alone, although, as before stated, the amount of new business has been small, the claims by death have been also below what was to be expected in the 27th year of the Company's existence; and the sum carried to the credit of the accumulated fund is correspondingly large.

Taking the two branches together, it will be seen that, in number of new policies issued, aggregate of amounts assured, and premiums arising therefrom, the results of the year exceed those of any of its predecessors.

Dividend to Shareholders. The report then goes on to state that, having regard to the highly satisfactory results of the year, and to the state of the reserve fund, the Directors had pleasure in recommending the payment of an increased dividend, at the rate of £10 per cent. on the paid-up capital of the Company, and the same, having been confirmed by the Meeting, will be payable on and after the 20th current, free of income-tax.

Quintessence of Jamaica Ginger and Camomile.

GINGER has long been deservedly known as an excellent domestic medicine, and combined with camomile, it is the most efficient stomachic tonic known, for while the ginger relieves the stomach from distension and flatulency, arising from impaired digestion, the camomile strengthens the coats of the stomach, and by that means gives it a healthy and invigorating tone. So highly concentrated is this preparation, it is unimpaired by age or climate, and well adapted for exportation. In Gout, Spasms, Dysentery, Cholera, or those complaints incidental to tropical climates, it is invaluable, as in numerous cases a dose or two has checked and frequently cured most alarming attacks. No family should be without it. Sold in half-pints, quarter-pints, and one-eighth pints.

Agreeable Sedlitz Powder, in one bottle, protected by a case, with measure and spoon inclosed. The advantage of this preparation is the perfect combination of the solid ingredients of the Sedlitz Spring in one compound powder.

It is very cooling and refreshing, well adapted for exportation, or travellers by land or sea.

Aromatic Tincture of Quinoline.—For the prevention of Fever, Intermittent or Recurrent Ague, and other effects of Malaria.

No person exposed to the influence or predisposing cause of Fevers should be without it, for if taken in small doses daily the system will become so thoroughly impregnated with its principles as to be rendered proof against all attacks of Contagion or Malaria.—Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter-pints.

The above articles prepared only by THOS. WILKINSON (late Wilkinson, Bridge, & Co.), 270, Regent-street, London, W.

"INDIAN BAEL" for Diarrhoea, Dysentery, &c. Imported by J. G. GOULD, Pharmaceutical Chemist, 198, Oxford street, corner of Orchard-street, Portman-square, W.

CORALIUM SILEX, an entirely new substance for ARTIFICIAL TEETH, which will neither discolour nor decay, remaining firm in the mouth, from one to a complete set, without springs, wires, or any visible attachment. It gives the greatest support to all loose or tender teeth, and answers most perfectly the purposes of mastication and articulation. No painful operation required. Prepared only by Mr. ALFRED JONES, Surgeon-Dentist to their late R.H. the Princess Augusta, the Duchess of Gloucester, the late Louis Philippe, and the ex-Royal Family of France, &c. At home from eleven till four. No connection with any person in the same profession.—No. 64, Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square.

TEETH and PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—

NOTHING IMPOSSIBLE.—The greatest and most useful invention of the day, AQUA AMARELLA.—Messrs. JOHN GOSNELL and Co., Three King-court, Lombard-street, Perfumers to her Majesty, respectfully offer to the public this truly marvellous fluid, which gradually restores the human hair to its pristine hue—no matter at what age. The Aqua Amarella has none of the properties of dyes; it, on the contrary, is beneficial to the system, and when the hair is once restored one application per month will keep it in perfect colour. Price one guinea per bottle.

DINNEFORD'S PURE FLUID MAGNE-

SIA has been, during twenty-five years, emphatically sanctioned by the Medical Profession, and universally accepted by the Public, as the Best Remedy for Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion, and as a Mild Aperient for delicate constitutions, more especially for Ladies and Children. When combined with the Acidulated Lemon Syrup, it forms an agreeable Effervescent Draught, in which its aperient qualities are much increased. During Hot Seasons, and above all, in Hot Climates, the regular use of this simple and elegant remedy has been found highly beneficial.

It is prepared in a state of perfect purity and of uniform strength by DINNEFORD and Co., 172, New Bond-street, London; and sold by all respectable Chemists throughout the World.

EVERY MAN WHO IS "WIDE-AWAKE"

will instantly make use of PARR'S LIFE PILLS, when he finds that he ought to do something to improve the state of his health. Persons who are suffering from headache or indigestion, arising from constitutional inaction, bilious derangement, or over-indulgence at the table, are particularly recommended to try Parr's Pills. They have never been known to fail in affording immediate relief. May be obtained of any medicine vendor, in boxes, 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d.; and in family packets, 11s. each.

RUPTURES.—BY ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

WHITE'S MOC-MAIN LEVER TRUSS

is allowed by upwards of two hundred medical gentlemen to be the most effective invention in the curative treatment of HERNIA. The use of a steel spring, so hurtful in its effects, is here avoided, a soft bandage being worn round the body, while the requisite resisting power is supplied by the MOC-MAIN PAD and PATENT LEVER, fitting with so much ease and closeness that it cannot be detected, and may be worn during sleep. A descriptive circular may be had, and the Truss (which cannot fail to fit), forwarded by post, on the circumference of the body two inches below the hips being sent to the manufacturer.

TWOFOLD EXTRAORDINARY CURE

EFFECTED BY HOLLOWAY'S PILLS and OINTMENT.—Mr. J. Webb, Boot and Shoe Maker, Chapel street, Durrcevin, Ireland, writes, under date Jan. 10, 1863, that he had been afflicted for seventeen years with a most dreadful asthmatic cough and shortness of breath, and latterly was also subject to benumbed sensations in his limbs, attended with heavy drowsy feelings, which threatened an apopleptic fit. In alarm he consulted the most skilful of the profession within many miles of his residence without avail, and fruitlessly used every means recommended by friends till he heard of the repute of Holloway's remedies, and resolved, with death staring him in the face, to give them a trial. They immediately relieved and ultimately cured him.

THE POLISH CAPTIVITY:
An Account of the present Position and Prospects of the Poles in the Kingdom of Poland, and in the Polish Provinces of Austria, Prussia, and Russia.
By H. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS, Author of "Russians at Home."

"A portion of this book on Poland by Mr. Sutherland Edwards has already appeared in our columns, though apparently such a small portion that it is substantially a new as well as a highly opportune production."—The Times, April 2, 1863.

"Mr. Sutherland Edwards not only understands his subject, but what is far more important and uncommon, his readers. He tells his audience precisely the facts which they are desirous to know. The 'Polish Captivity' is full of light but suggestive sketches, pieces justifications of historic value, national songs and stories, descriptions of Polish towns, Polish nobilities, and Polish women, and is, besides, a book an English lady might read with twice the ease of Mr. Trollope's latest novel."—Spectator, March 28, 1863.

"The book in which Mr. Sutherland Edwards has depicted the 'Polish Captivity' would have been valuable at any time, but the opportuneness of its arrival so enhances its merits, that it is certain to command a greater than ordinary success. It is a subject which few writers are competent to deal with, but Mr. Edwards possesses special qualifications for the task. Personal experience has made him well acquainted with Poland and the Poles; the interest he takes in their fortunes has led him to study the question of their wrongs with zeal and assiduity, and his acquaintance with Slavonic languages enables him to make use of stores of information which are unserviceable to the ordinary student. Consequently, he is entitled to speak with authority, and his opinions on the condition, feelings, and prospects of the various nations which he describes deserve a very different hearing from that which he should give to the crude theories formed by a careless traveller passing hastily through an unfamiliar land."—London Review, March 28, 1863.

"Mr. Sutherland Edwards visited Poland in the interval between the Warsaw massacre and the breaking out of the insurrection. What he saw he has described simply, but forcibly. Few English writers are so likely as he to form a correct judgment on any matter connected with Russia or Poland. His acquaintance with each of these countries, its people, its language, and its literature, gives him advantages which few other travellers possess. In wandering with him about the ruins of Warsaw, we feel that we are in the hands of a trustworthy guide, one who can tell us what the people are chattering about, and who can explain the written mysteries which, under the veil of an unknown tongue, elude our half-dimmed eyes. Mr. Edwards's book will be read with deep interest. It is well written, and the narratives are well constructed."—Athenaeum, March 21, 1863.

MAILS TO INDIA.

Mails to India and China, via Marseilles, are despatched from London as follows, viz.:—Those for Bombay packets, on the evening of the 3rd and 18th of each month; and those for Calcutta packets (including mails for Ceylon, Madras, and China), on the evenings of the 10th and 26th of each month. When any of these dates falls on a Sunday, the mails are made up on the following evening.

Letters and Newspapers can be forwarded to any part of India, via Bombay and Marseilles, and in most cases will reach their destination some days sooner than if despatched by the following Calcutta mail. The Bombay mails via Southampton, however, are no longer available for the transmission of Letters or Newspapers to the Madras Presidency.

Mails for the Mediterranean and all parts of India and China, except the Bombay Presidency, are despatched via Southampton on the mornings of the 4th and 20th, or, when either of these dates falls on Sunday, upon the previous evening.

Mails for the Mediterranean, the Presidency of Bombay, and Upper or North-West Provinces of Bengal and China, are despatched via Southampton, on the 12th and 27th of the month, except when these dates fall on Sunday, in which case they are forwarded on the previous evening.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

HIS HONOR the Lieutenant-governor starts on June 15 for Bhaugulpore, which, it is said, he will reach by "easy stages" at the end of August. These will be easy stages, indeed.

The Municipal Bill for Calcutta has passed the Legislative Council of Bengal. The Council has been adjourned sine die. It will probably not meet again before October next.

A new Cotton Pressing Company has been started at Meerut.

Telegraphic communication between Nynee Tal and Meerut is completed. The Mofussilite observes that "this great boon is extended to all the sanitarium in India, and before another five years have passed away we shall have railway communication with them." This will be a boon indeed. The invalid British resident in India will then be within reach of almost any sort of climate especially suited to his constitution. The Bengal Hurkaru says that the greatest impediment to the extension of railway lines at present is the want of timber for sleepers. Sound timber is becoming more scarce every day, especially since Lord Canning gave over to Jung Bahadoor the productive forests on the territory adjacent to Nepal. A saul beam once worth five rupees is now worth thirty-five, and Jung Bahadoor charges seven rupees for timber that could formerly be had for one rupee eight annas.

Calcutta society has at last roused itself from the apathy and languor produced, perhaps, by the oppressive heat of the weather, and its leaders have "aired their eloquence in the Town Hall" on the subject of the marriage of the Prince and Princess of Wales. It is rather late in the day to make this demonstration of loyalty, but better late than never. The first resolution was proposed by the Lieutenant-Governor. The Bishop of Calcutta, Sir Charles Trevelyan, Sir Mordaunt Wells, and Mr. Seton-Karr were amongst the European speakers. A report of the meeting will be found, under the head of "Bengal," in the body of our present number.

On the 25th of May a ball is to be given by Sir Robert Napier in honour of the Queen's birthday. Oddly enough, the invitations were at first confined to the sterner sex. No ladies were invited, and no members of the non-official community. The oversight, we suppose, was remedied.

We are sorry to find a report in the mail just received of the death of Longueville Loftus Clarke, so well known to all old Indians. He was the oldest member of the Calcutta Bar, and for nearly half a century has taken a conspicuous part in nearly every public meeting in Calcutta. He had suffered severely from the usual infirmities of age and some of the diseases of the climate during the last two or three years, and his friends were quite prepared for the news of his death. He was singularly gentlemanly and courteous in his manners—a most pleasant and cordial companion. His great ability as an advocate was beyond all question, and Sir Lawrence Peel, the late Chief Justice of Bengal, now a member of her Majesty's Privy Council, has been heard to state that no man within his knowledge could state a case with such admirable clearness and precision. He pleaded his last cause before the Court of Rangoon on the 23rd of April. At the conclusion of his speech he resumed his chair, became senseless, and was carried out of Court in that condition. He ceased to breathe the following morning at four o'clock. He thus died in harness, after forty years' incessant exertion of brain and body in a trying climate. We believe he had not once re-visited his native land in all that time. He had infinite "pluck" in him of all sorts, and must have had originally an iron constitution; for he was a very free liver, as well as a singularly hard worker. He ought to have died rich, but he died in debt. He always lived expensively, and was lavishly liberal of his means; and perhaps no professional man ever did more gratuitous work for persons to whom the payment of heavy fees might have been distressing. Longueville Clarke had his faults and frailties, as have all human beings; but, to use a common but expressive phrase, his heart was in the right place. It was never appealed to in vain.

We have also to report the death of Major Sparks, at Rangoon, who is very highly spoken of, and whose loss is deeply regretted by a wide circle of friends.

Intelligence has been received in England of the death of Dost Mahommed Khan, but we see no confirmation of it in the Indian papers just received.

The cholera is stated in the Rangoon Gazette to have broken out at Thyetmoo, amongst the European troops stationed there. During four days twenty-one persons fell victims to the disease, amongst them an assistant-surgeon.

All sorts of specifics for cholera have been at various times talked of with great confidence. At one period it was supposed that no attack of cholera, if taken in time, could resist pills made of spiders' webs. Some people strongly recommended large draughts of cold water. The most common and successful remedy is a mixture of brandy, peppermint, and laudanum. Salt has often been said to arrest cholera in its commencement; it is now officially recommended. Captain Wood, Deputy-commissioner to C. B. Thornhill, Esq., Inspector-general of Prisons in the North-Western Provinces, states, in a report to Government, that, on the recommendation of the Civil Surgeon, Dr. Beaman, while the cholera was raging in the city of Hoosungabad, he gave the prisoners an extra quantity of common table salt, and found it a most powerful remedy. We have often been told that cholera is occasioned by a want of salt in the blood. Salt has been used very largely and successfully in cholera seasons, both as a prophylactic and as a cure, being administered for the latter purpose by the mouth, and in the form of injections into the veins.

The natives of India cannot withhold their recognition of the immeasurable superiority of British people in all the arts and sciences of peace and war; but while admitting the many great qualities of the Feringhees, they point with astonishment, and, perhaps, a little exultation, at the vices which degrade them, and that which most attracts their attention is intemperance in drink. They read the proceedings of court-martial on drunken officers and soldiers, and they see the drunken British tars reeling and roaring down the Lall Bazaar, the Thames-street, or Wapping, of Calcutta. Instead of imitating our good qualities, the natives are beginning to rival us in our worst. Young Bengal gets tipsy at hotels on champagne or pale ale, and we now find that a native officer has just been brought before a General Court-martial assembled at Barrackpore, for having indulged too freely in what has been characterised by an eloquent preacher as liquid fire and distilled damnation. Subadar Ayah Singh, of the 25th Regiment of Native Infantry, was charged with being found drunk when ordered for parade. The court pronounced him guilty, and sentenced him to be suspended from rank, pay, and allowances for six calendar months. Jemadar Heera Singh, of the 14th Regiment of Native Infantry, was tried by court-martial at Simla, on the 24th of April, for altercation with Gunner Patrick Nealon, and for "taking away excessive quantities of rum from the regimental canteens." He was indeed acquitted of the theft, but sentenced to three months' suspension from rank and pay for his conduct towards his European fellow-soldier, Gunner Nealon. The Bengal Hurkaru complains that Europeans are punished more severely than natives. Not long ago, we are told, an ensign who had won his commission by gallantry in the field was cashiered for the crime of Ayah Singh, and another ensign was cashiered for a crime similar to that of Heera Singh.

PUBLIC MEETING AT CALCUTTA TO ADDRESS HER MAJESTY QUEEN VICTORIA AND THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES ON THE LATE ROYAL MARRIAGE.

The meeting at the Town-hall on the 21st of May was not very numerously attended. Sir Robert Napier was absent owing to indisposition, but the Government was well represented in the person of the Lieutenant-governor of Bengal and several members of the Executive and Legislative Councils. The number of native gentlemen present was particularly noticeable. Owing to the entire absence of punkahs (a gross oversight on the part of somebody), the heat was found to be most overpowering, and great disapprobation was expressed.

The proceedings commenced by the Sheriff reading the requisition convening the meeting. He alluded to the absence of Sir R. Napier through illness, and announced that a native gentleman, whose name we failed to hear, had signified his intention of contributing Rs. 500 to the fund.

The Lieutenant-governor moved the first resolution—That this meeting, on behalf of the European and native community of Calcutta and the Bengal Presidency, desires to express in a loyal and dutiful address to Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen their heartfelt congratulations on the joyful occasion of the marriage of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales.

Seconded by Colonel Booth, H.M.'s 43rd Regt.

The Bishop of Calcutta moved the following address to her Majesty, and said that very few sentences were needed to commend it to the meeting, for if there was one feeling in which all Englishmen were agreed, it was that they regarded the present Queen with almost romantic devotion. He spoke of a time when this had been different, showed how the limited monarchy of England combines the stability of a despotism with the life and energy of a democracy, and then turned to the moral influence exercised by the Sovereign as the acknowledged head of society. This influence, important in any country, is of the very highest importance in an old country, where the relations of society are complicated, and where there are three or four aristocracies—of birth, of wealth, of knowledge, of position in the State. It is the sovereign who unites all these together, giving a tone and setting an example to all, and teaching all to do their duty to the whole nation. If the political power of the princes of the House of Brunswick is less than that of the Tudors and Plantagenets, their moral power is far greater, and this result is chiefly owing to the present reign. The speaker then referred to the evil influence exercised by the sovereign forty years ago, and traced the improvement through the reign of William and Adelaide to the days of Victoria and Albert. Many of us, he said, can recall the first bright image of that happy youthful royalty, and remember how as years went on sons and daughters were added to the kingly stock, we saw that pure domestic life which is the glory of England almost idealised in its highest household, how the effect of this has penetrated deeper and deeper into English hearts and homes, how all have felt more and more keenly the excellence of caring for duty before all things, of bringing up children, and ruling families, in the love and fear of God. Then he spoke of the graces of art literature, and other influences, most necessary to refine the material tenderness of a commercial age, which had adorned the Court of the Queen, and cited as an instance the change which had come over the office of Poet Laureate, formerly a byword for vapid, common-place, and cringing flattery, now not unworthy to be held in succession by the two greatest poets who have adorned our literature since Milton, and capable of inspiring Tennyson with poetry which will last as long as the English language. The Bishop ended his speech by quoting the conclusion of Tennyson's beautiful dedication of his works to the Queen, beginning "May you rule us long, and leave us rulers of your blood," &c.

To Her Most Excellent Majesty the Queen. May it please your Majesty.

We the inhabitants of Calcutta, European and Native, in public meeting assembled, for ourselves, and in the belief that we represent the population of this part of India, humbly offer to your Majesty our loyal congratulations on the marriage of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to Her Royal Highness the Princess Alexandra of Denmark.

The fervent attachment to your Majesty's person and house, which animates the inhabitants of the British Islands, is felt in equal strength by the innumerable groups of men spread over the world who are united by common subjection to your Majesty's authority, and not less by us who, placed under widely different circumstances from the rest of our fellow-subjects, have nevertheless equal reason with them to value those principles of just and wise government which have made your Majesty's Crown famous, and have secured for the people rule by your Majesty greater and more unbroken public happiness than has fallen to the lot of any other nation upon earth. We pray your Majesty to believe that we share your Majesty's present joy, as we shared your heavy sorrow, no less than those of your subjects who are nearer than we to your Majesty's person, and whose deep and universal sympathy has been displayed under your Majesty's eye.

We were placed under your Majesty's more immediate authority at the close of a troubled period which is never likely to recur in the history of this country. Your Majesty's name is, therefore, the symbol to us of revived peace and restored prosperity, and we trust and pray that these blessings may be continued to us until races to whom your Majesty's ancestors were unknown have learned, under your distant descendants, to regard the Royal power wielded by your Majesty as your European subjects have long regarded it, as the sure guarantee of equity in the laws, of material progress, of moral advancement, and of civil freedom.

It is the earnest hope of your Majesty's subjects that every blessing may attend the marriage of the Prince and Princess of Wales.—We are, &c.,

In seconding the motion of the Lord Bishop, Moonshee Ameer Ali said: I with great pleasure second the proposition made by his Lordship the Bishop of Calcutta for offering a congratulatory address to her Most Excellent Majesty the Queen of England and Empress of India, on the marriage of her eldest son, the Prince of Wales, our future King, and beg to add, on my part as well as on behalf of several Mahomedans, that when the tidings of the Prince's marriage reached us we sincerely prayed to the Throne of Grace to crown the wedded Royal pair with health and prosperity, and to bestow thousand blessings on their lives, and we in April last held a special meeting, under the management of Moulvie Abdool Luteef Khan Bahadoor, the proceedings of which appeared in to-day's newspapers. If we had been citizens of London we would personally have appeared before the throne of her Majesty, and offered our hearty congratulations on the occasion; but as it is not been our fortune to do so, we beg to tender our sincere and heartfelt wishes through the medium of address.

Proposed by the Hon. Sir Charles Trevelyan, K.C.B., seconded by the Hon. Sir Mordaunt L. Wells, Kt.,—

3. That this meeting, on behalf of the European and Native community of Calcutta and the Bengal Presidency, desires to express in the following Address to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales and Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales their most cordial congratulations on the marriage of their Royal Highnesses:—

To their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales.

We the inhabitants of Calcutta, European and Native, in Public Meeting assembled for ourselves and for the population of this part of India, beg respectfully to tender our congratulations to your Royal Highnesses on your auspicious marriage.

Far removed as we are from your Royal Highnesses' presence, we claim to share in the enthusiasm with which the union of your Royal Highnesses was greeted by our fellow subjects in England. We ask your Royal Highnesses to be assured that affection for our august Sovereign, and fervent interest in the fortunes of your Royal Highnesses extend as widely as the sphere of the Queen's authority, and are felt by multitudes in this Empire, which founded by British enterprise and valour, is destined to grow great by British policy and justice, and to be the theatre of those arts of good government which nowhere flourish so prosperously as under the shelter of the crown which your Royal Highnesses will one day inherit.

It is not possible for us, nor will your Royal Highnesses expect us, to frame any higher wish for your Royal Highnesses' welfare than that you may enjoy as full a measure of domestic happiness as was granted for many years to the household in which the Princess of Wales is now included.—We are, &c.

Proposed by Rajah Radakant Deb Bahadoor, seconded by Mr. William Maitland,—

4. That an offering be presented to their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, to be composed of different articles of Indian manufacture, and that for this purpose subscription lists be opened in the principal towns in the Presidencies of Bengal, the North-west, the Punjab, and in Oude.

Proposed by the Hon. W. S. Seton-Karr, seconded by Mr. J. B. Knight,—

5. That the following gentlemen, European and native, be appointed a committee to carry out this object, and that such committee shall have power to add to their number, and to communicate with local committees on the subject:—

The Hon. H. S. Maine, the Hon. David Cowie, E. C. Bayley, Esq., Brigadier P. Harris, Colonel H. I. P. Booth, Joseph Graham, Esq., F. C. Sandes, Esq., F. Jennings, Esq., Rajah Radhakant Deb Bahadoor, Rajah Kalikrishna Bahadoor, Manockjee Rostomjee, Esq., Moolvie Abdool Luteef, the Hon. A. Eden, William Maitland, Esq., and H. W. I. Wood, Esq., hon. secretary.

At half-past six o'clock the meeting dispersed, after passing a vote of thanks to the chairman.

ADDRESSES OF THE MAHOMEDAN COMMUNITY.

Proceedings of a general meeting of the Mahomedan community of Calcutta and vicinity assembled for the purpose of adopting congratulatory addresses to her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, and to their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, on the occasion of their Royal Highnesses' marriage.

The meeting was held at Taltoollah, in the house of Moulvy Abdool Luteef Khan Bahadoor, member of the Legislative Council of the Lieutenant-governor of Bengal, on Monday, the 27th April, 1863, at eight P.M.

Among others, the following gentlemen attended:—Moulvy Mahomed Wujeeh, Moulvy Abdool Luteef Khan Bahadoor, Moonshee Hubeebool Hussun, Shaikh Ibrahim, Anjumood Dowlah Bahadoor, Zoolfukkarood Dowlah Bahadoor, Moonshee Sufder Ally Khan Bahadoor, Hafiz Abdool Ghunnee Khan Bahadoor, Seede Nuzer Ali Khan Bahadoor, Moulvy Abbass Ally Khan, Shaikh Easa Bin Kurtas, Moulvy Mahomed Abdool Rowfoof, Mirza Gholam Rasool Khan, Hukeem Ahmud Mirza, Synd Dost Ally Khuleel, Hukeem Aga Mahomed, Hukeem Bundah Ally Khan, Hukeem Mahomed Musseeh, Hukeem Hifazet Hossain, Meer Mahomed Bakur, Moulvy Abdool Huck, Mirza Wuzer Ally, Aga Mahomed Hossain Chulapee, Moulvy Mahomed Khan Bahadoor, Moulvy Abdool Ghuffoor Khan Bahadoor, Moulvy Abdool Hukeem, Moulvy Obydoolah, Moonshee Fida Ally Khan Bahadoor, Shaikh Koodratoolah, Doctor Tumeez Khan, and about a hundred others.

Pursuant to the motion of Moulvy Abbass Ally Khan, Moulvy Mahomed Wujeeh took the chair.

Moulvy Abdool Luteef Khan, in moving the first resolution, addressed the meeting as follows:—

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen,—The whole of the Mahomedan gentry of Calcutta and vicinity have to-night met together for an object whose importance cannot be too highly appreciated, whether considered with reference to the strong feeling of loyalty which actuates us here all present, or the worthiness of the movement itself. The late wedding in the Royal family, I need not perhaps say, has been an occasion of universal rejoicing throughout her Majesty's vast dominions to an incalculable extent, as it well deserves to be. It is beyond doubt, that the welfare and happiness of all loyal subjects is blended with the welfare and happiness of their rulers. Accordingly, in all countries which have at all progressed in civilisation, the people invariably consider their own happiness naturally allied to that of the Sovereign, and happy the people among whom this feeling is strong and universal, and happy that Sovereign, too, who has such people for subjects. Let us rejoice that such happiness is ours, and also that of our Most Gracious Sovereign the Queen of all England and of all India.

The wedding of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales with her Royal Highness the Princess Alexandra of Denmark has been an occasion of joy in the Royal family, and hence one of public rejoicing throughout the length and breadth of the British dominions. The English subjects of her Majesty, availing themselves of their proximity to the Throne, have already offered their congratulations to her Majesty herself, as well as to their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess, sparing no expense in manifesting their joy and their loyalty in a suitable manner. Is it becoming that we, the representatives of the Mahomedan population of the metropolis of British India, should allow it to be said of us that, because placed at a distance, we have not shared in the joy of the occasion, nor invoked the blessings of the Lord Almighty on the Royal Family on the auspicious event? No—we feel we are to the full as loyal and loving subjects of her Majesty the Queen as the best of her English lieges, and we cannot allow the opportunity to pass away without giving (as far as lies in our power) suitable expression to the strong spirit of unfeigned loyalty which governs us, one and all. With your permission, gentlemen, therefore, I would propose that it is incumbent on all her Majesty's Mahomedan, as on all her other subjects, to come forward with an expression of their fervent wishes that the marriage might prove as auspicious in the private life of the august personages as we expect their happiness to be reflected in that of the millions of millions of subjects who own the beneficent British rule. I have therefore to propose:—

That a proper token be made of the intense joy of the Mahomedan community of Calcutta at the celebration of the marriage of their Royal Highnesses, and that the same be conveyed to her Majesty the Queen and to their Royal Highnesses in a suitable manner.

The resolution was seconded by Moonshee Hubeebool Hussun, and being put to the vote, was carried unanimously.

Moulvy Mahomed Abdool Rowfoof then moved the second resolution, addressing the meeting as follows:—

As loyal subjects of our Most Gracious Sovereign Queen Victoria, we meet this evening to take into consideration the best means of giving suitable expression to those feelings of joy which the news of the late auspicious event in the Royal family has naturally called forth. As an important section of her Majesty's loving lieges, we meet to discuss how best to offer to her Majesty herself, as well as to the Royal pair (over whom may the Lord Almighty ever watch!) our heartfelt congratulations on the event. We meet to determine how most effectually, from this distance, to lay at the foot of the throne our ardent hope, that the occasion we celebrate may prove of unmixed blessing to all who flourish under the shadow of the throne.

It is the birthright of all loyal subjects, in all parts of the world, to share in the happiness as well as in the unhappiness of the Sovereign; but when that Sovereign happens to be the justest and the best of all Sovereigns, the birthright becomes a sacred one, indefeasible and inviolable. It cannot be said of us, the Mahomedan community of Calcutta, that we do not exercise this right to the full. We all feel joy in the inmost recesses of our hearts in the joy of our Sovereign, as we lately had occasion to feel miserable in her grief. We all have a grateful sense of the good we enjoy under our Sovereign's most excellent Government, and we all naturally feel that our happiness springs from hers.

I know that all of you cherish sentiments worthy of the occasion—sentiments which do honour to your character as loyal subjects, but it will not do for us, gentlemen, to bury these sentiments within our hearts, and to remain quiet. We must approach the throne in the best way we can, and humbly make known the feelings which the circumstance has called forth. I propose, therefore, gentlemen, with reference to the resolution just passed,

That the following address be adopted by the meeting for submission to her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen:—

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty.

May it please your Majesty,—We, the undersigned, representing the Mahomedan community of Calcutta, your Majesty's loyal subjects in the metropolis of India, on their behalf, offer our most respectful congratulations on the marriage of your Majesty's eldest son, his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, to her Royal Highness the Princess Alexandra of Denmark.

The event has not before occurred in history of such an address being laid before the Throne of England by Mahomedans in this part of the world.

We pray that it may be graciously received as proof of the devoted loyalty which is felt towards your Majesty by those of our faith and race, who here, as elsewhere, have every reason to bless your Majesty's beneficent rule.

We pray that this humble Address may be accepted as an assurance of our personal affection for your Majesty, whose dominion has already, in so short a time, given rise to feelings of the purest patriotism and loyalty among the people of this country.

That the auspicious union may be productive of happiness, both in your Majesty's family and also to the whole British Empire, is the heartfelt prayer and belief of your Majesty's most dutiful and most devoted subjects.

It is desirable, on more than one account, that our feelings of loyalty should find expression whenever opportunities occur, and the present is decidedly an occasion on which they ought to be spoken out. I therefore second the proposition to adopt the Address to the Queen, submitted by Moulvy Abdool Rowfoof.

The third resolution was then moved by Moulvy Mahomed Khan, who spoke as follows:—

This is the first time that so many learned and respectable gentlemen of the Mahomedan community have assembled together, in order to record how sincerely they share in the happiness of their Sovereign, and how anxious they are to express the feelings of love and loyalty they entertain towards their Sovereign. In connection with the late wedding in the Royal family, it occurs to me, that an Address to the Royal Bride and Bridegroom, as well as one to her Majesty, would be appropriate, I therefore propose:—

That besides that just adopted for presentation to her Majesty, the one I now submit be considered and adopted for presentation to their Royal Highnesses.

To their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales.

May it please your Royal Highnesses,—We, the undersigned, representing the Mahomedan community of the capital of India, most humbly approach your Royal Highnesses, on the joyful occasion of your Highnesses' union, an event which has filled with rejoicing every race and nation subject to the glorious rule of her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen.

We respectfully offer your Royal Highnesses our heartfelt congratulations, as a tribute of the deep and sincere interests we feel in all that concerns the personal happiness of the Royal family of England, under whose auspices so many millions of the world enjoy the blessings of peace and prosperity.

Enjoying those blessings as we do, in our anxiety to express our gratitude and allegiance, we turn to those who fitly represent the goodness and greatness of our Gracious Sovereign; and therefore lay before your Royal Highnesses this outpouring of our homage and affection.

That the union hailed with so much delight by all men, may be crowned with every happiness, and that the Almighty Ruler of the Universe may shower upon your Royal Highnesses every precious gift of life, and take you both into His special keeping, is the fervent prayer of—Your Royal Highnesses' most humble and dutiful servants.

The Address was read, and the resolution having been seconded by Zoolfukkarood Dowlah Bahadur, was put to the vote, and carried unanimously.

The fourth resolution was proposed by Hukeem Aga Mahomed, and was to the effect:—

That the following gentlemen form themselves into a committee, for giving full effect to the resolutions adopted, viz., Moulovy Mahomed Wujeeh, Moonshee Ameer Aly, Moulovy Abdoor Luteel Khan Bahadur, Moulovy Mahomed Abdoor Rowoof, and Moulovy Abdoor Hukeem.

The resolution was seconded by Mirza Gholam Rusool Khan, and carried unanimously.

MAHOMED WUJEH, Chairman.

MR. ELDERED IN AGRA.

To the Editor of the "DELHI GAZETTE."

Sir,—The cause of truth requires that I should answer so much of the statement of Mr. Eldred's case as refers to his residence in the Agra Central Prison.

For this purpose I will describe in as few and simple words as language can command, how Mr. Eldred behaved himself whilst in my care and custody, and what line of treatment I adopted with regard to him.

To commence with the morning of Mr. Eldred's admission to this prison. In accordance with my custom, upon receiving information of the admission of a European to the jail, I proceeded to the gateway to conduct him in person to his place of confinement, and having desired Mr. Eldred to follow me, I led the way through the centre of the jail. He obeyed me readily enough, and in turn was followed by the guard which ordinarily attends the superintendent through the jail. Upon arriving at the room which Mr. Eldred was to inhabit, I turned round to address myself to him, when to my astonishment I beheld marching along in front of the sepoy guard, instead of the man in loose clothing I had spoken to at the gateway, a naked white man, clad in a small pair of drawers only, who as he marched along, his muscular body exposed to the broad sun-light, his long dark beard contrasted with his white skin, his arms folded defiantly across his chest, his pale face expressive of much self-satisfaction, presented as perfect an image of a mad man as it is possible to conceive.

During this passage from the gateway Mr. Eldred had silently divested himself of his clothes, and in the scanty quantity of clothing alluded to above, which he fortunately had worn under his other clothes, had solemnly marched through the centre of the jail, in the sight of at least a thousand natives.

Knowing that I had to deal with a man reputed to be of unsound mind, I spoke very kindly to him, pointed out the impropriety of his behaviour, and asked him why he had taken off his clothes. The answer was, "Oh, I felt warm."

After a little he was persuaded to put on some clothing, and lie down on the bed provided for him in a room twenty-four feet long by thirteen feet wide, furnished with a table and chair and bed, the room having a good sized window in one side of it, and two grated openings in the other, through which, night and day, a stream of air from a thermantidote was thrown into the room. A punkah was suspended above the bed and kept swinging night and day. Before leaving him, I reasoned with him, telling him he was not to consider himself a prisoner, but placed in my care for a few days while arrangements were being made, by which a European officer could be furnished to conduct him to Calcutta. I ordered his diet to be such as was suited to a European, furnished him with tea and milk from my own house, and English tobacco from the bazaar, and placed a Eurasian prisoner in charge of him to act as guard attendant.

For a few days he remained quiet and apparently contented. The door of his room was allowed to stand open, and he was permitted to take as much exercise as he pleased in a large open court-yard; still he showed symptoms of a weak mind by preferring to go without clothes, by asking for enormous doses of medicine, and complaining of imaginary ailments in his stomach.

I visited him daily morning and evening, talking with him at each visit, and offering him books and newspapers to read.

After about a week's residence in the jail he began to show a spirit of determined insubordination. He commenced by tearing up a large stone from the floor of his room, and with it broke the gratings which closed the opening for ventilation; these were mended the same day, but again broken to pieces that evening—and the same evening he commenced to destroy the walls of his room, and before I could arrive at the scene of his labours had made an opening right through the wall about two feet square, not apparently with a view to escape, however, for the hole was on a level with his head and chest.

I remonstrated with him; his answer was, "I made this jail, why shouldn't I knock it down?"

He was calm and well behaved when I spoke to him, and readily followed me into another room, adjoining the one in which he had been at work, and its exact counter-part.

I then gave him repeated warning that if he persisted in destroying the walls I should have to put him under restraint. But the next day he commenced upon the wall of the second room, and by the time I arrived to bring him to order, had made a hole about four feet square right through the wall, and when I first caught sight of him, he was standing dressed only in his little drawers, covered from head to foot with earth, working away with both hands tearing the bricks, which were set in mud only, from the wall at a rate which would soon have brought the whole place about his ears; altogether the picture presented by Mr. Eldred at that moment was again that of a perfect mad man.

Under such circumstances it became my duty to put him under restraint; this was done as quietly as possible, a pair of handcuffs being put upon his wrists. When this had been accomplished, he stretched out his legs and said, "now put irons on me." My answer was, "No, that is not necessary;" he then started to his feet and cried with oaths, "I kill any native that touches me." I then took him by the arm and he lay down quietly on his bed. A broad tape was passed over his arms and beneath his back and the ends tied beneath the bed, another tape was passed across his legs and tied beneath the bed also. All this was done under my immediate superintendence, and in great part by my own hand, and no violence or hurt of any description was done to him. The whole business was for me a painful but unavoidable duty, and this he seemed to understand himself, as he neither struggled nor offered the least resistance.

Masons were put upon the wall of the room, and it was repaired.

At my evening visit I found him quietly laying on his back smoking his pipe. Upon drawing his attention to the recently repaired wall, he said, "Oh, yes! it's all right, I mended that."

The band confining his arms was loosened that evening, so that he could either turn round or sit up. Four strong men, high caste natives, were ordered to remain at the open door of his room to keep watch and ward night and day. On the following day the band confining his legs was altogether removed, and the band about his arms so loosened that it only prevented his going about without dragging the bed after him.

During the four days he remained thus confined to his bed every possible care and attention was given to him. I saw him myself three times a day, and he seemed calm and contented; whenever it was absolutely necessary he was permitted to leave his bed for a little time; at the end of the four days alluded to the handcuffs were removed, and a European officer having been provided, Mr. Eldred was despatched on his road to Calcutta, and the last words he spoke to me were, "Dr. Plank, I wish to shake hands with you, for you have been very kind to me," and so he went his way peaceably, and I trust it will be many days before I again have charge of a man who gave me so much trouble and anxiety as Mr. Eldred, who, if not mad can certainly simulate madness with considerable effect—I am, your obedient servant,

CHARLES PLANK, Supdt. Agra Prison.

THE FENWICK GRIEVANCE.

Our Delhi correspondent, whose letter appears elsewhere, is evidently a warm partisan of Mr. Fenwick and his one-sided pamphlet. The ungentlemanly tone and bad temper displayed in Mr. Fenwick's tract on the "Administration of Justice in the Punjab," would have prevented us from paying any attention to his absurd declamation, had not this officious friend stepped in to stir up the smouldering embers. The case may be briefly stated. Mr. Fenwick, who appears to be a pleader in the Delhi Courts, received a retaining fee of Rs. 2,000, to conduct what threatened to be a difficult and tedious case for Mr. T. Skinner, but before anything could be done the hostile party was summoned before a higher tribunal. Mr. Skinner thereupon took the matter into his own hands, and the result was a compromise, whereupon that gentleman demanded from his legal agent the refund of a portion of the fee he had paid him. This extraordinary demand was naturally declined; but on a civil action for the recovery of the amount claimed being instituted before Mr. Berkeley, extra assistant commissioner, Mr. Fenwick was ordered to refund Rs. 1,500, without costs. The latter at once filed an appeal, and gave security for any amount that should be finally decreed against him. Col. Browne, who was then commissioner of Delhi, confirmed Mr. Berkeley's singular decision; but, on learning from the appellant that he purposed to appeal to the judicial commissioner of the Punjab, he prohibited execution to issue until the case was finally decided. Three months are allowed for making an appeal, and this period had not elapsed when Mr. Fenwick complied with the formalities prescribed by law. By an extraordinary combination of blunders, however, a writ of distress was actually issued and enforced while the appeal was still pending, and one fine morning, on his return home from the conventional drive, Mr. Fenwick found five "sedentary gentlemen"—such is Oriental grandeur—in possession of his Penates. A cheque for Rs. 1,827 caused these unwelcome inmates to take a speedy departure, and a complaint was instantly lodged with the new commissioner, Mr. P. S. Melvill. Now, the original decree was for only Rs. 1,500 without costs, but the attachment was issued for Rs. 1,827, which included costs. There is nothing to show how this mistake came to be made, but the affair is throughout a "Comedy of Errors," for the very security put in by Mr. Fenwick was an unstamped paper, and legally valueless. The commissioner, too, was under the impression that only two months are allowed for appeal, and accordingly, on being asked by the deputy commissioner if the decree could be executed, he replied that "as the limit for appeal had passed, and apparently no petition of special appeal had been lodged with the judicial commissioner, there appeared to be no reason why the decree should not be executed." The real delinquent, however, was Mr. Macnaghten, who cannot be acquitted of very culpable negligence, if he cannot fairly be charged with exhibiting a strong personal animus in this matter. It cannot be denied that Mr. Fenwick had thus far very legitimate grounds of complaint, and the first official personage who recognized this fact was Mr. Melvill himself. In noticing Mr. Fenwick's protest against Mr. Macnaghten's summary proceedings, the Commissioner observes:—

"His protest is just. In the first place, the attachment of defendant's property should not have been made in the face of Colonel Browne's order, and, in the next, it was not correct to proceed against the defendant's property without first calling on his security to make good the amount. It cannot be supposed for a moment that Mr. Macnaghten was ignorant of the Commissioner's order, or of the fact that defendant had given security. It was, therefore, an act of great carelessness his issuing the writ of the 4th April, and he deserves to be censured accordingly, though it should be observed that, Mr. Macnaghten having left the Punjab for Bengal, it has not been possible to call on him for an explanation. It appears that no immediate action was taken by the sheriff on the receipt of Mr. Macnaghten's writ of distress, for on the 8th instant, after that gentleman had left Delhi, the Deputy Commissioner directed Lieutenant Bewsher, Assistant Commissioner, to enforce it. The Deputy Commissioner also acknowledges that it was he who directed Mr. Macnaghten to issue the writ. Lieutenant Bewsher was not liable to blame, for he obeyed the orders of the Deputy Commissioner. But it is much to be regretted that the Deputy Commissioner was not more circumspect. It was his duty, before giving orders in such a case, to examine the file. Had he done this, the indignity and injustice to which the defendant has been subjected would not have occurred. Every person is entitled to even-handed justice from our Courts. A copy of this order is to be sent to the Deputy Commissioner and to Mr. Fenwick. If Mr. Fenwick wishes to hand on the matter to the Judicial Commissioner, he is at liberty to do so."

There are few gentlemen, we imagine, who would not have accepted this confession of error as an ample and satisfactory apology. Not so Mr. Fenwick. Nothing would satisfy him, it seems, short of the deposition and utter ruin of those who had injured him, to the third and fourth generation. We accordingly find him applying for redress to Mr. R. N. Cust, the Judicial Commissioner of the Punjab, but without eliciting any reply from that gentleman. In no way discouraged, he next addresses the Lieutenant-governor himself, and demands the condign punishment of Mr. F. Cooper, c.b., under Section 146 of the Penal Code. This time he is successful, and the Secretary to the Punjab Government administers a most severe reprimand to the retiring Judicial Commissioner.

"It is evident," he says, "that the conduct of Messrs. Macnaghten and Cooper, in relation to the case under notice, was deserving of severe censure, and when Mr. Fenwick brought the matter before you judicially, and with the sanction of the Appellate Court, you were bound, as the head of the judicial department, to take grave notice of those officers' proceedings. The Lieut. governor regrets exceedingly that you should have failed to do so, as it is justly stated by Mr. Fenwick that 'as you did not reply to his appeal he is constrained to appeal to his Honour.' 'It is vain on your part,' the Lieut. governor observes, 'to deplore the irregularities of the Punjab Civil Courts, if you fail in taking any notice whatever of complaints against officers, when those complaints are deliberately supported by their superiors. As regards Mr. Fenwick's remark that he will not be content with the mere censure of Mr. Cooper, he is, of course, at liberty to take such legal proceedings as he thinks fit. Copies of this letter will be furnished from this office to Mr. Fenwick, in reply to his letter to this office, and to the Bengal Government for communication to Mr. Macnaghten. You will be good enough to forward a copy to the Commissioner of Delhi for communication to Mr. Cooper."

Such severe censure as this, administered by the highest local authority, might well be deemed an ample punishment for almost any abuse of power. What Mr. Cooper's feelings must have been when he received this scathing condemnation of his conduct can hardly be imagined. To be compelled to submit in silence to such a castigation must have caused him to writhe in mental anguish. The payment of so many thousand rupees damages would be nothing in comparison of this open affront, and internal suffering. But Mr. Fenwick is, apparently, one of those vulgar-minded individuals whose estimate of pain is reckoned up in rupees, and thus we find him bringing a joint action against Messrs. Cooper and Macnaghten for illegal attachment of his property, thereby causing him to suffer "indignity and injustice." Very likely he will get a verdict in his favour, but we are much mistaken if he carry with him the higher verdict of public sympathy. His present action will be stigmatised by all frank and generous minds as spiteful and malicious, and another such victory will be as fatal to him as to triumph over the Romans was to Pyrrhus. He may pocket his rupees, but he will forfeit the respect of his townsmen and neighbours.—Bengal Hurkaru, May 12.

MISCELLANEOUS.

REVENUE.—N.W.P.—The Revenue year in the North-West Provinces commences on the 1st October and ends on the 30th September. One result of this system is, that all the returns referring to the famine season are comprised in the Report of the Administration for 1861-62. Wherever any harvest at all was gathered in, the deficiency in the yield was more than compensated by the enormous rise in price. In the Jubbulpore division agricultural produce was both abundant and dear, and the occupiers of the land reaped very large profits. The average fall of rain during the season was 12.2 inches in the Meerut division, 33.8 in Kumaon, 18.3 in Rohilkund, 15.6 in Agra, 15.5 in Jhansie, 26.4 in the Allahabad division, 49.1 in Goruckpore, 32.2 in the Benares, and 31.4 in the Jubbulpore divisions: making a total average of 22.8. The aggregate demand for land revenue was Rs. 4,14,30,011, being only Rs. 3,58,803 less than in 1859-60, and of this nearly three lakhs were due to the revision of assessment in Banda. On account of current revenue Rs. 3,93,60,000 were collected, or about 95 per cent. of the demand. The balance, Rs. 20,69,912, exceeds that of the preceding year by about eight lakhs, a very slight difference when due allowance is made for the drought. In the eleven famine-stricken districts the amount of revenue demanded was Rs. 1,43,14,004, of which Rs. 1,34,89,703 were collected, leaving a balance of Rs. 13,24,301, or less than nine per cent. on the total demand; but in fact the actual amount of outstanding balances attributable to the famine was under eleven lakhs, or not more than 6 per cent. One-half even of this reduced balance will be eventually recovered, so that the actual loss to the Government will not exceed £60,000. The entire outlay caused by the famine is stated at Rs. 20,26,108, of which Rs. 5,41,783 were expended in the distribution of food, Rs. 3,40,113 in advances for the purchase of seed and cattle, Rs. 20,918 in minor relief works, Rs. 9,14,294 on public relief works, and Rs. 11,00,000 may possibly have to be remitted, though, as we have already remarked, one moiety of the last item will probably be recovered. It is still more gratifying to learn that all traces of the famine had very nearly disappeared at the date of the compilation of the report, and that the afflicted districts had been "restored to a state of prosperity which could hardly have been expected by the most sanguine." Severe measures for the realization of land revenue were resorted to in comparatively few instances—there being only 25 sequestrations against 113 in the preceding year. There was an immense increase, however, in suits for rent, which is ascribed in a great measure to the "popularity" of the Collector's Court under the new Act. The total number was 45,220—against only 12,431 in 1859-60—of which 29,227 referred to arrears of rent. The Lieutenant-governor, indeed, disputes the attractive properties of the Collector's Court, and prefers to attribute this enormous increase of litigation to the new rule, which requires a separate suit to be instituted against each defaulter. On the other hand, the number of appeals has decreased from 179 to 115, and it is remarked that this depends in some degree on the character of the Putwarree's papers. The Abkaree, or Excise Revenue, which "rises with agricultural prosperity and declines with the prospect of scarcity," nevertheless exhibited a deficiency of only rupees 70,000. The Stamp Revenue, however, far more than made up for this trifling falling off, by advancing from Rs. 13,08,037 to Rs. 24,34,671, while the Sayer Revenue dwindled down to Rs. 83,303,—owing, partly, to the transfer of several tracts from the Revenue Department to that of Public Works. A casual sum of Rupees 2,52,071 was realised by the sale of confiscated lands, and the unusual but significant remark is made that "there is still, in different divisions, a large extent of confiscated land undisposed of, and the Board have been informed that it is the wish of the Lieutenant-governor that in eventually dealing with this property the importance of encouraging European settlers of respectability and intelligence should not be lost sight of." The total revenue for the year 1860-61, including Rs. 47,85,972 from salt, and Rs. 16,27,446 from income-tax, amounted to Rs. 5,28,52,599. The Board further congratulate themselves on having accomplished an annual saving of Rs. 61,155 by the abolition of eleven Tehseelees, though their joy was somewhat alloyed by the necessity of establishing an additional Tehseelee in Mynpoory at an annual cost of Rs. 4,287. Some progress is said to have been made in the preliminary measures for a revision of the settlement in the Dehra Dhoon, the Jhansie division, and the district of Goruckpore. In the last-named zillah, the cultivation of opium had extended over 58,000 beegahs, involving the circulation of 14 lakhs of rupees, while the exports and imports together were valued at Rs. 23,60,000—the former exceeding the latter by 11 lakhs. The Customs administration for the official year, ending 30th April, 1862, rose to the unprecedented sum of Rs. 1,07,53,774, of which Rs. 65,51,210 came from the North-West Provinces, and Rs. 42,02,564 from the Punjab—Rs. 94,36,935 being derived from salt, Rs. 12,75,063 from sugar, and Rs. 41,776 from miscellaneous sources. The cost of collecting this revenue of upwards of a million sterling was only Rs. 9-7-6 per cent., but our home philanthropists will be most pleased to learn that the day labourer's average annual consumption of six seers of salt does not stand him in more than 1½ per cent. of his earnings.—Hurkaru, May 22.

HINDOO AND MUSSULMAN OPINION.—We are glad to announce that, from this month, the Government of Bengal has established the office of reporter on the native press. Every newspaper and periodical, in whatever language, published within the jurisdiction of the Lieutenant-governor, is now purchased, read, and, if necessary, reported on. The duty is entrusted to the official Bengali translator, assisted by a Bengali. Our native contemporaries must distinctly understand that it is not intended to exercise anything like a censorship. They may write what they please, and the more honestly the better, but there will be no interference with them, unless they expose themselves to the provisions of the Penal Code. The day is past when any check beyond that which the public weal and morality demand from all newspapers alike, will be recommended for the native journals. It is the expression of their honest opinion, not its concealment, which the English want. India has more freedom than Austria and the rest of Europe, and the Hindoo or Mussulman editor is invited to write with an honesty which the first men in France dare not show; which was forbidden to De Tocqueville; which is not allowed to Foreade, Thiers, and Guizot, to Cousin, Berryer, and Lamartine. It is forty-five years since the Durpan, the first Bengali newspaper, was published in Serampore. What that began the Bengali Government Gazette, also established in Serampore in 1840, continued. Two years after the Durpan the Chundrak appeared for the purpose of defending widow-burning and Hindoo orthodoxy. A great advance was made ten years after, in 1850, when the Probakur appeared daily, distinguished by a literary style and a moderate tone. Since then the Bengali press has made great strides. Magazines and books followed, every year less and less idolatrous and obscene, so that for 30 works of this class published in 1820 we have 322 separate publications, including six newspapers, in 1857, and of all these more than half a million of copies were printed. These figures may safely be doubled for the past year. Even during the first year of the mutiny there were in the North-Western Provinces 22 native presses which issued, in Hindee, Oordoo, and Bengali, 15 newspapers, with a circulation of 3,222, and for every copy at least ten readers must be allowed. To many of these Government subscribed, and the officials supplied them with information; while at Budaon and Bareilly the newspapers were actively used by the rebels. But how little the printed journals give us an idea of the news circulated in native society may be seen from the fact that in Delhi there were in 1857 from 20 to 30 Akbarnuvs or newswriters, and that intelligence of the fall of Delhi was first communicated by the writer employed by the Jeypore Durbar. Every native chief and banker has his newsgatherers throughout India, who write periodical letters which are equivalent to our commercial circulars with political intelligence added. The establishment of an official reporter on the native press is a compliment to our contemporaries, and should be viewed by them as an incentive to attempt after a higher journalistic ideal. The consciousness that their journals will come under the eyes of Government, and have a legitimate influence on its acts, ought to make them careful to write only that which is true, and to encourage all that is honourable, pure, and elevating, while they faithfully mirror the opinion of their countrymen. Honesty is far more important than ability in the present stage of the native press. In proportion to both, but especially the former, will be the influence of native newspapers on the country and on the action of Government. The time must come when Englishmen will look to the native papers, as they do to their own journals, for a true index of Hindoo and Mussulman opinion.—Friend of India, May 21.

THE OPIUM REVENUE.—A weekly contemporary, in an article on the Financial Statement, says:—"There are but two blots in the Budget—opium is taken at eight millions sterling, while the monopoly is maintained and the principle of paying off debt is endorsed. As to the former, a storm at a certain season may blast the poppy in a night, and so long as that is possible, and the evil is not met by sacrificing the monopoly to a heavy excise duty, and so calling in private enterprise, we must continue to call the opium revenue precarious, immoral, and contrary to the principles of Political Economy." That is, the writer would have the opium cultivation—now confined to a few districts too widely apart to be all affected by the same storm—spread over the entire land! We need not pause to inquire what would be the moral, or rather immoral effects of such extension under the auspices of private enterprise. Nobody will require any assurance that a first fruit of the change would be, the making opium-eaters and opium-smokers of the entire rural population of India. They are comparatively free from the taint now, and before they should be exposed to it, Government should render the growing of a single poppy felony, and sacrifice its revenue of eight millions derived from the unwholesome appetite of the Chinese. Another evil would be, that the extension of the cultivation of the drug to the other districts of India would cover the land with an army of corrupt excise underlings, whose presence would be exponential of an undercurrent of disregard for the law, adroitness in evading it, of a desire to cheat Government, and of all the evils of smuggling. We are not inclined to refuse to admit there is no actual immorality in supplying the Chinese with opium, but, on the other hand, we fearlessly assert that, were Government to throw open its monopoly, and by so doing, as would inevitably happen, habituate the people to the practice of drugging themselves, Government would have incurred the guilt of as great immorality as any Government of modern times has to answer for. The Friend of India, the journal quoted from above, is an ardent declaimer against the evils of the Abkharie system. More than once, and with perfect truth, has he taunted the Indian Government with doing its best to make drunkards of the people, a charge to which every Indian Government is vulnerable so long as the present Abkharie system continues. Yet, while thus complaining, in common with ourselves, that the Abkharie is doing its utmost to introduce drink to the tastes of the people, and urging that Government should cease not only to vend intoxicating liquors, but go further and prohibit their manufacture, the Friend does his best to beget the impression it would be well for this country and its people that the growth of opium were legalised throughout the land. No sound argument has ever been advanced in support of the restriction of Abkharie operations that might not be used with equal force against the extension of the cultivation of opium. We therefore fail to perceive how a writer who considers it his duty to urge the contraction of the Abkharie operations can reconcile it with his conscience to advocate the free and unrestrained cultivation of opium.—Phoenix.

INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.—It is now four years since it was resolved to remodel the Indian Medical Service; to abolish it, to let it die out, to amalgamate it, to make it a general service, to localise it, and to put it through twenty other processes, according to the genius, the caprice, or the inventive powers of those who have had its destinies in their hands. During these four years the Secretary of State for India, his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge and the Director-general of the Medical Department in England, aided by several officials in this country, have constructed all kinds of schemes, measures, and plans for the transformation of the unfortunate service in question; but their productions were so unsatisfactory, even to the manufacturers themselves, that they have all, in their turn, been abandoned, broken up, and thrown aside as useless, mischievous, or inapplicable. It is not very much to be wondered at that three officials in England, who have never set foot in India, and know nothing whatever about the country, should fail to make out a plausible and practicable scheme for the remodelling, or amalgamation, or other disposal of the Indian Medical Service; but it is somewhat surprising that, amidst the utter break down of all the schemes framed by their ignorance and self-sufficiency, they should not, till they had spent four years at work on utter failures, have thought of consulting, on the difficulty with which they were occupied, the person or persons in this world best qualified to give them such information and counsel as would get them out of the dilemma, and put an end to the anxiety and painful suspense of the medical officers of the late Company's armies. Yet such is the case. The last letters from London state that, a few days before despatch, and after four years' utter failure, the Secretary of State for India had sent for Dr. J. Forsyth, late chief of the medical department in Bengal, to consult him, and get his views and opinions with reference to the remodelling of the Indian Medical Service. During the three years which terminated Dr. Forsyth's service at the head of the medical department in this country, and whilst the three heads at home were trying to manage the medical amalgamation question, Dr. Forsyth was never once consulted by either the home or Indian Government concerning measures of the most vital importance to his brother officers and the service which he represented; but the Indian action, as regarded their destiny, was left in the hands of colonels of artillery and infantry, amateur actuaries, and dilettante financiers. Now that Dr. Forsyth has been out of the service, it has been suddenly remembered by the three high officials whom we have mentioned, that, in their distress, a medical officer who passed more than forty years in India, in all grades and positions, who served from Cabul to Prome, and terminated his career at the head of the medical service, might possibly be of some little use to them, and they have condescended to listen to his counsel. Dr. Forsyth's advice, which we suppose and sincerely hope is final, and has been adopted, was, that a special medical service for India should be maintained, with its own rules and conditions of service, that those medical officers now on the present Indian medical lists should go over to the new service, of which they would form the foundation and nucleus, and that medical officers of the British army should also be permitted, if so inclined, to volunteer for and enter the new Indian medical service. These are the heads of Dr. Forsyth's views and recommendation; and we believe we may assume it as almost certain that they will be acted upon. The same letters which convey this intelligence state that it is intended to constitute a Medical Secretariat at the India House; and that the appointment was promised to Dr. Grant, formerly surgeon to Lord Dalhousie, and more recently apothecary general at this Presidency. We congratulate our medical readers, and the medical services at large, on there being now really some prospect of an early settlement of a question and a measure which have kept them for four years in the most painful suspense and anxiety.—Englishman.

MISSIONARIES AND MUNITIONS OF WAR.—At the time of the last great Caffre war, the European missionaries were roundly accused of supplying guns and ammunition to the enemy. Though somewhat too highly coloured, the charge was not altogether groundless, and the messengers of peace and good-will to men did actually conduct themselves as purveyors of war. The patriotic free-traders, however, of Birmingham were mainly answerable for these treasonable transactions, for had they not provided the materials neither missionary nor merchant could have entered into these homicidal transactions. From a notification published in Saturday's Gazette, there is some reason to suspect that English traders have been engaged in a similar manner along the coasts of China, and have disposed of all sorts of warlike arms and ammunition to the belligerents in that empire. It may very safely be assumed that it little matters to these traffickers in human slaughter, whether their purchasers are Imperialists or Taipings; whether they side with their own countrymen, or stand opposed to them in the field. It is a disgraceful and horrible trade, and scarcely more reputable than that of professed wreckers. The forfeiture of their property is not a punishment at all commensurate with their crime of blood guiltiness, though the fear of exposure may possibly deter them from further pursuit of this odious traffic. We should be glad to learn, however, that the Chamber of Commerce had taken steps to vindicate the mercantile community of Calcutta from the imputation implied in the letter of the 13th April from the Hong Kong Government, and to prevent the possibility of such an unfaceable stigma attaching itself to the fair name of the Calcutta merchants.—Bengal Hurkaru.

STORM AT AGRA.—The storm which visited Agra on the evening of the 7th seems to have been much more general than we supposed, and a great deal more violent at other places than here. Two correspondents in to-day's columns from Lucknow and Moradabad allude to its effects. This is the second time this spring that heavy hailstorms have visited the surrounding country, but have not come to Agra.—Delhi Gazette, May 12.

SQUALL ON THE INDUS.—A serious squall took place on the Indus a few days ago, accompanied by a dust storm, which occasioned seventeen native craft to capsize, with the loss of merchandise, consisting of cotton, saltpetre, indigo, &c., to the value of upwards of a lakh of rupees. A ferry-boat was upset at the same time, and thirty people drowned.—Lahore Chronicle.

RAILWAY.—Our readers will be glad to hear that on or before the 1st of October the railway will be open from Allyghur to Bolundshuhur, and that, in the event of an ample supply of Saul timber, for sleepers, being speedily supplied, the line will be extended to Meerut and opened in January next. From about the same date, we are told, it will be possible to travel hence to Bombay as well as to Calcutta entirely by rail.—Morning Post.

MR. A. M. DOWLEANS.—We perceive that the above gentleman was yesterday gazetted an honorary justice of the peace for Calcutta. We were not aware that Mr. Dowleams had returned to India, but should he have arrived, or when he does arrive, it will be incumbent on either the Government of India or Government of Bengal to reward him for the very valuable and peculiar services he has rendered, and most ably rendered, in connection with the Great Exhibition. The catalogue alone of the Indian articles exhibited compiled by Mr. Dowleams, and distributed to the press before he left India, is in itself of more account than the entire expenditure the Exhibition has entailed on the Government of India. We are not aware that Mr. Dowleams would consider his appointment by the Government of Bengal to the deputy chairmanship of the town council as a recognition of his services; but we think the post is one which Mr. Dowleams would occupy to the general satisfaction. As member of the municipal commission he was the working member, and bad as was the system under which that commission had to work, Mr. Dowleams made something of it.—Phaniz, May 21.

THE HOSPITAL SHIP "BENTINCK."—We may mention, for the information of Calcutta invalids and convalescents, that the accounts given of the hospital ship Bentinck, by disinterested persons who have returned from a visit to her, are highly favourable. It appears that since the Bentinck has been at Diamond Harbour, the thermometer has ranged in her 'tween decks, on an average, ten degrees lower than it has been standing in Calcutta; but it is at night that the advantages of the ship are more especially felt, as the cool sea breeze blows steadily through her, and sleep is described as most refreshing and sound. We hear that Sir Robert Napier intends going down to pay a visit to the Bentinck about the end of the week, and see how things are going on; and from all we have heard, he will be satisfied and pleased with everything on board.—Englishman, May 21.

YOUNG BENGAL'S LIBERALITY.—Whatever may be the foibles of "Young Bengal," want of sympathy with the poor and suffering is decidedly not one of them. In our local columns will be seen a long list of subscribers to the fund for the relief of the fever-afflicted villagers in the Hooghly, Baraset, and Nuddea districts. The aggregate sum is upwards of four hundred rupees, contributed almost entirely by the scholars of the Presidency College, the Hindu School, and Colootollah Branch. We say "almost entirely," because the professors of the Presidency College have set a noble example to their pupils, which the latter have not been slow to follow. The contributions from this college amount to no less than two hundred and eighty-one rupees, twelve annas, varying from ten rupees to two annas each. Were it not invidious to make such a remark, we should be disposed to award the highest praise for generosity to the smallest donation, for it is the offering of a poor scholar who can feel for the poverty of others, and can forget his own need that he may relieve their still greater distress. All honour, however, to all who have co-operated in this good work. The consciousness of having done their duty will be their highest reward, but such active and genuine charity has no occasion to blush at publicity. The subscriptions from the Hindu school amount to no more than thirty-eight rupees, owing, we believe, to the interference of the head master, who, for some reason or other, disapproved of the bounteous disposition of his youths. From the Colootollah branch, however, one hundred and seventeen rupees, fifteen annas, have been forwarded to the general fund—a very handsome sum, taking all things into consideration. Three young native gentlemen called at the office of this journal on Saturday last, and requested the editor to be their channel of communication with the local Government. The grateful duty was cheerfully accepted, and the generous offerings of the youth at these three educational establishments were immediately forwarded to the Honourable Ashley Eden, Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

JUDICIAL DISPUTE.—An incident lately occurred in the Bengal High Court which is of some interest in itself, and has been misrepresented. Mr. Piffard, a junior barrister, had been engaged in a case, the merits of which Mr. Justice Morgan was summing up, when the counsel jauntily and frequently interrupted him. Annoyed, the Judge testily said, "Sit down, sir—hold your tongue," and went on. Mr. Piffard was silent till the next case, in which he was also engaged. Mr. H. V. Bayley was sitting with Mr. Morgan, when Mr. Piffard declared he could not, in justice to his client's interests, conduct the case until Mr. Morgan apologised for his behaviour. Mr. Morgan at once left the bench, and the matter was referred to the Chief Justice, who will consult the whole bench on the subject. The bar has taken it up, for it seems that the Acting Advocate-general was somewhat similarly treated by the same judge when master in equity. Mr. Piffard, in the evening, sent a captain of the army, with whom he was residing, to Mr. Morgan's house to ask an explanation, and the rumour was at once circulated that a challenge to fight had been given. The two judges and Mr. Piffard have made their affidavits, and if anything like a challenge is proved to have been sent it will go hard with Mr. Piffard. Chief Justice Erle's remark in the recent case of "Kennedy v. Brown" is admirable.—"The law trusts the advocate with the privilege in respect of the liberty of speech, which is in practice bounded only by his own sense of duty." Had this difficulty occurred with any other barrister or any other judge it would have been easy of settlement. A similar question was raised in England in a case in which Lord Erskine was the offender.

THE ALBERT MEDICAL AND FAMILY ENDOWMENT LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.—A very natural feeling of impatience has been manifested by a few of the policy holders in the Albert Medical and Family Endowment Life Assurance Company. There has certainly been great delay in apportioning to each his respective share of the £50,000 bonus due to the profit policy-holders. But it is no light task to divide that sum into so many varying amounts. In fact, it is a precisely similar case to the apportionment of prize-money, and we all know how tedious an operation is that. Besides, Professor de Morgan, to whom this matter was referred, is almost the hardest worked man in London. Independently of his professorial duties, he is a regular contributor to nearly all the leading periodicals of the day, and besides all this, he is continually engaged in calculations far more urgent and difficult than the distribution of this little sum of £50,000, about which so much impatience is expressed. We would further warn our readers against being misled by letters on this subject, addressed to the public journals. There is no more favourite "dodge" of stock-jobbers than to attempt in this manner to depreciate the value of good shares. It is their only chance of purchasing such shares at a price that will yield them a profit in again disposing of them. Their object, it must be remembered, is not to invest their own money, for very often they possess little or none to invest, but to trade upon the ignorance or timidity of the credulous multitude. Their business is to frighten or decoy the unwary into heavy losses which constitute their own gain. It is truly a hateful occupation, and one to be shunned and despised by every honest man, whether of high or low degree. We do not say that the letters which have appeared in the Hurkaru, in reference to the wealthy insurance company in question, have been foisted upon us with any view to injure that institution. We prefer to think that they are the genuine expression of a very pardonable movement of impatience. Indeed, had we not regarded them in that light, we should not have admitted them into our columns; but it is certain that advantage is being taken, in some quarters, of the delay in distributing the bonus, to spread abroad injurious hints and insinuations, in the hope, as they would say, of "turning an honest penny." Honest! Such men know not what honesty, or honour means. There is no more mean, dishonest, tricky mode of making money, than by resorting to such underhand scheming. Fortunately, in the present case such individuals are not likely to do much harm. The Albert Medical and Family Endowment Life Assurance Company is based on far too solid a foundation, to be affected by whispers of vague and simulated suspicions. According to the last report of the directors of the Indian branch, a considerable increase in new business, coupled with a decrease in claims, characterised the operations of the past year. New policies had been issued to the number of 678, yielding annual premiums to the amount of Rs. 1,64,869 8-6, while the claims by death amounted to only Rs. 5,01,183, against Rs. 6,24,100 in 1861. The cancellments amounted to Rs. 19,39,784, the relative annual value of which was Rs. 91,847-2-11. The policies in force on the 31st December, 1862, were 2,970 in number, assuring Rs. 1,67,79,285, and yielding in annual premiums Rs. 7,74,883-14-8. Lastly, the gross investments amounted to Rs. 18,78,934, of which Rs. 13,67,986-14-0 consisted of Government securities. The bonus of £50,000 was set aside in the preceding year at the recommendation of Professor De Morgan, as belonging to policy-holders assured with profits. But, as we have already remarked, the calculations necessary for the division of this sum between the policy-holders occupy no little time, and hence the delay which is said to have created some disquietude. At a very early date, however, each policy-holder may confidently rely upon receiving his share of the company's bonus.—Bengal Hurkaru, May 18.

DEPORTATION OF ANNAMENSE.—The French are not only highly imaginative—they are also eminently utilitarian. They will go to war for an idea, but the inexorable logic of facts leaves them in the usurped possession of a province. Even in small matters this practical spirit may be seen peeping out. Because a missionary was murdered, they set to work and slaughtered some hundreds of Annamese, with a considerable sacrifice of money and human life on their own part. Then to indemnify themselves for this expenditure of blood and treasure, they annexed three fine provinces of Cochin China. But as it appears that the soil of Annam is not favourable to French constitutions, they are now trying the experiment of adapting Annamese constitutions to a French soil. When the mountain was obstinate and refused to come to Mahommed, the prophet had the good sense to go to the mountain. As a converse to this, the French have decided that if they cannot go to Annam, Annam shall come to them—by shiploads. The first fruits of this very practical policy are seen in the shape of a cargo of Annamese imported into Bourbon. As slaves? Comment donc, monsieur! Are the pioneers of civilisation and "all that sort of thing" to be suspected of dealing in human flesh, for depriving their fellow creatures of Heaven's own gift of liberty? Perish the thought! No; these interesting barbarians will, in a few years hence, return to their benighted but wondering countrymen, loaded with rich presents, les œuvres de Racine, photographs of the Imperial family, and the last number of Le Follet. Slaves! France treats her prisoners of war in a very different fashion to that of perfidious Albion. Divided as honoured guests among the colonists of Reunion—appropriate name!—they will pass a pleasant time, nor think of care or woe, and merely for the sake of digestion will be occasionally invited to take a little gentle exercise on the plantations. The French certainly manage these matters exceedingly well.—Bengal Hurkaru, May 19.

THE 28TH N.I., under the command of Captain A. Robinson, arrived at Allahabad on the 18th of May, en route to Meerut. This regiment has been engaged during the last twelve months in suppressing the revolt on our N. E. frontier.

LIEUTENANT JACKSON, in pursuance of his sentence by court-martial to four years of penal servitude, will be sent under military escort to Bombay, under instructions that will be given to the officer commanding the Lahore division. His name is ordered to be struck off the roll of the Royal Engineers from the 21st of April, 1863.—Hurkaru, May 22.

THE SIKHS.—The comparison we lately instituted between the German mercenaries under the Roman empire and the Sikhs in our own service appears to be more exact than is at all desirable. Complaints have more than once reached us of the lawless and predatory habits of the corps stationed at Barrackpore, and only a few days ago a very serious disturbance took place at Nye-hatty between the local police and a small body of these hereditary marauders. In the course of the affray one of the Sikhs, we are told, received such severe injuries that he died within a few hours afterwards; and an old woman is said to have been so cruelly beaten by these ruffians that her life is even now in considerable danger. Without vouching for the perfect accuracy of this statement, we have no hesitation in saying that a very vigilant supervision is necessary wherever Sikh sepoyas happen to be stationed. They are represented as generally conducting themselves as if encamped in an enemy's country and in the midst of a hostile population. Politicians of the Machiavellian school may, perhaps, approve of a system that renders the soldiery odious to the people, at the same time that it encourages the contemptuous feeling which the former are ever apt to entertain towards the unwarlike burghers and peasantry. But we cannot think that the inhabitants of Bengal deserve to be subjected to the humours of a brutal soldiery, or that there can be any excuse for stationing a regiment of Sikhs within such an easy distance of Calcutta. Be this as it may, it cannot be endured that they should be permitted to wander about the country in large gangs, oppressing and terrifying the helpless villagers, plundering their property and insulting their wives and families.—Bengal Hurkaru, May 19.

COMPLETE COMMUNICATION IN THE INDIAN SEAS.—In consequence of arrangements made by the Messageries Impériales Company, a steamer of the Dutch Government will leave Batavia on the 29th of every month for Singapore, to meet the M.I. boat from Hong Kong. She will stay in Singapore till the arrival of the steamer from Suez, and then return to Batavia, a passage of rather less than three days. We are glad to see our French friends bestirring themselves in the good cause of speedy intercommunication, but are of opinion that economy might be quite as profitably consulted as speed. There should certainly exist no reason for the new company adhering so religiously to the old P. and O. rates; and if it be true, as we hear, that they have agreed to convey the servants of the Dutch Government for something less than ordinary passengers, the Government here has a good claim to a similar advantage. It would do the company no injury, as the decrease in price would be compensated for by the increase of traffic. Nay, we are certain that, were the reduction even extended to all classes of passengers, the Company would be no sufferers by the change. Comfort and good living are highly desirable, but, when combined with economy, they are simply irresistible.

HOCKEY ON HORSEBACK.—Even the hot weather in the plains of Bengal cannot tame the Anglo-Saxon energy in pursuit of anything like "sport." This morning we learn from our Tirohoo correspondent how the indigo planters and others get rid of their surplus vitality in defiance of sunstroke and the yawning difficulties of wide and deep ditches. But that is a joke to the "little game" which the gentlemen of the Lahore Light Horse, as we believe, have introduced into Barrackpore, and are about to import into Calcutta itself. We have heard of the performances at "hockey on horseback," a term which explains itself to all whose shins ache in sympathetic remembrance of the hockey grounds of their school days.

THE CALCUTTA QUEEN'S BIRTHDAY BALL.—A facetious correspondent draws attention to the oddly-worded notice which appears in the daily papers, touching the proposed official rejoicings, at Government-house, on Monday next. The ball to which allusion is made appears to be given literally to "her Majesty's servants," and to them only. Not even their wives and daughters are invited to be present, while the non-official world receives a broad hint to remain in the outer darkness appropriate to "nobodies." And yet we would give a good deal to see the ball opened by the head of the Government, and the highest dignitary of the Church, footing it feebly on the light fantastic toe, down the middle and up again. His Honour the Lieutenant-governor will, of course, perform a pas seul, while the other notables join hand-in-hand and dance around, to the old tune of "Here we go round the mulberry bush." The evening's entertainments will, doubtless, terminate with a "galop infernal," after a succulent and varied supper, and few shall part where many meet, until the grey dawn is breaking, and the roar of the cannon is succeeded by the voice of the sluggard who is heard to complain.—Hurkaru.

A POLICE INSPECTOR AND HIS CARRIAGE AND PAIR.—India is, before all others, the country of anomalies. It is quite impossible to reason a priori about anything, however simple. Who could ever imagine, for instance, that at a time when everyone is complaining of the high price of provisions throughout Bengal, and of the impossibility of keeping up a respectable appearance on a moderate income, a Police Inspector, with a monthly salary of Rs. 175, of which Rs. 20 go for house rent, could be in a position to pay down in hard cash Rs. 800 for a pair of chesnut mares and a carriage? That such is the case is certain, for Mr. John Bluett, Inspector of Police at Burdwan, has actually performed that difficult feat, and has a receipt to show as a voucher for his cleverness. But this is not the whole extent of Mr. Bluett's financial skill. Soon after he joined his appointment—he thinks it was in December last, for he is apparently so used to deal with hundreds of rupees that he cannot be expected to retain a very exact recollection of such insignificant transactions—this model of economy was able to give Rs. 350 for a Cabul horse, saddle, and bridle, which he purchased from Cook and Co. through the agency of—his mother. He did not, however, think it necessary to ask for a receipt for such a trifling sum as £35, though when it came to a matter of £80 he felt it necessary to secure himself against the chance of a second demand for payment on the part of his maternal horse-dealer. Indeed, he had grown so careful in the interval between December and February that he placed this receipt for safe custody in the hands of his solicitor. This proved to be a very lucky accident, for it so happened, although he had not himself the slightest idea of the fact (as we have the highest authority for stating—his own, to wit) that his mother, at the time she sold him that neat turn-out for a police inspector, was in what he terms "insolvent circumstances." It was on the occasion of a visit to Calcutta, in the month of February, that Mr. John Bluett first beheld his mother's carriage-and-pair, and, at first sight, fell helplessly in love with them. So great was his longing for the pretty toy, that his kind mamma was afraid to disappoint him. In the course of her professional experience she had seen so much of the disastrous consequences of longings ungratified, that, as she herself says, she was "obliged" to sell him the dashing equipage she had purchased for herself. But in this vale of tears men never are, but always to be blest. Thus, no sooner did Mr. John Bluett find himself the happy possessor of a barouche-and-pair, and his mamma's receipt, than his happiness was dimmed by the reflection that he had no place where to put them. There is no reason, as he says, why police inspectors should not drive their families about in a barouche-and-pair if they can afford it, and the pleasant pastime does not interfere with their official duties. Without doubt police inspectors have the same liberty as other men to spend their savings upon horses and carriages, and to treat their wives and daughters to agreeable drives in the cool of the evening; but then they should first of all provide themselves with stables. The carriage they can dispose of in one of their drawing-rooms, when the entire suite is not required for balls and masquerades, for private concerts and amateur theatricals, for tableaux vivants and acted charades; but, where there is a family, there are not enough bedrooms to spare for the accommodation of quadrupeds, and thence it may happen that those troublesome animals, after being bought and paid for in rupees, and a receipt duly taken and lodged with the family solicitor, will have to be left in the doubtful care of a mother with three vocations, midwife, boarding-house keeper, and horse-dealer—Lucina, Ceres, and Hecate. In this manner it came to pass that Inspector Bluett's charming equipage, instead of whisking his interesting family round the fragrant groves and grimy coalpits of Burdwan, was being jobbed out by his mamma, on her own account, for so many rupees a day. But if police inspectors can afford to indulge not only in the luxury of a family, but also in the comfort of a carriage—at the distance of sixty odd miles or so—might it not be advisable to reduce their salaries within more modest bounds, and to that extent relieve the Indian tax-payer? Native officials, we have heard, are frequently enabled to save a hundred rupees a week out of a salary of forty rupees a month; but we do not see how that is a whit more strange than a police inspector paying away 1,150 rupees in two months upon a salary of Rs. 175 per mensem. Verily, there are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamt of in our philosophy. Of Mrs. Margaret Lee herself we need say very little, save to congratulate ourselves that we are not likely, in the common course of nature, ever to require her services. It is a new type of the genus Gamp, and one not inferior to that great original in the combination of a ghastly humour with ghoul-like "proclivities." We have here Mrs. Todgers, Captain Hunt, and Mrs. Gamp, all three rolled into one—and the product is Mrs. Margaret Lee, mother of Mr. John Bluett: mater pulchra filius pulchrior. For the full and able report of this case, which appears in to-days Hurkaru, we are indebted—to our shame be it said—to yesterday's Englishman.—Bengal Hurkaru.

THE LIEUT.-GOVERNOR N.W.P.—His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor entered the Cantonment of Meerut this morning at 6 A.M., under the salute due to his rank. His Honour, who is staying with Mr. Fleetwood William, c.s., the Commissioner of Meerut, will not hold a formal levee, but, between the hours of twelve and two, will receive the heads of the various departments, and, we presume, any other gentlemen who may desire to see him. His Honour will leave this for Moradabad this evening.—Mofussiliite, May 8.

MEERUT COTTON PRESSING COMPANY.—A new company entitled the "Meerut Cotton Pressing Company" has commenced at Meerut. The prospectus states that the company will be in a position to undertake the compression of cotton by machinery, by the time the ensuing crop is ready for the market. Operations will in the first instance be confined to Meerut, preparatory to their being extended throughout the North-West Provinces. The want of increased facilities for screwing cotton has long been felt in the Upper Provinces, and this company engages to supply that want in every important station.—Bengal Hurkaru.

A LIGHT-HOUSE, it is said, is about to be erected on Minicoy Island, so that the ill-fated Colombo will not have been altogether lost in vain.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE ARCHDEACON.—Amongst the intending departures by the coming steamer is that of the Venerable Archdeacon Dealtry. We do not wish the reverend gentleman a final farewell, inasmuch as we believe his return is contemplated, but we may long for his prosperity and happiness while he shall be withdrawn from us.—Madras Daily News, May 8.

NAWAB OF THE CARNATIC.—The Madras press is unanimous in supporting the claims of Prince Azeem Jah Bahadour to succeed to all the rights and privileges of his late nephew, Prince Mahomed Ghous Khan, Nawab of the Carnatic. A memorial is in course of signature, and will be presented to Parliament during the present session.

THE DETACHMENT OF 14TH BRIGADE ROYAL ARTILLERY (transfers from B and C batteries to the battery now serving in China) has been ordered to proceed immediately by road and rail from Secunderabad to Bombay, where they will embark without delay for China.

THE OFFICE OF DEPUTY SHERIFF AT MADRAS is to be forthwith abolished, on the recommendation of the Judges of the High Court. The consolidated salary of the Sheriff will for the future be Rs. 920 per mensem, without perquisites of any kind. The appointment will, it is understood, be made a permanent one, and the present incumbent, Colonel Impett, is spoken of as the "coming man."

THE S. S. "BURMAH."—The lucky purchaser of the hull of the wrecked steamship Burmah has already succeeded in recovering property to the value of thirty thousand rupees. The original purchase-money has been thus cleared twice over. It is almost needless to add that the astute individual who made such a good bargain was a native.

BOMBAY.

POLITICAL SUMMARY OF THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY, 1861-62.

The summary of political events within the Presidency of Bombay during 1861-62 is by far the most interesting portion of the annual report on the administration for that year. There is something almost comical in the cool, supercilious manner in which allusion is made to the good or bad conduct of the various chiefs and princes who are passed under review. Their proceedings are commented upon very much in the style of a schoolmaster writing to the parents of his pupils on the behaviour of those interesting youths during the past term. The first on the list is the Rajah of Kolapoor, who was rewarded for his loyalty during the disturbances in the southern Maratha country by being invested with the actual administration of his little State, which was previously under British superintendence. The Government, however, retained in their own hands the supervision of the principal Jagheerdars, with a view to prevent intestine feuds. Two of these, the chiefs of Vishalgur and Bowra, succeeded to the management of their estates under the most favourable circumstances, with a considerable cash balance in hand, and free from all liabilities beyond the annual payment, respectively, of Rs. 5,000 and Rs. 3,420, towards the military establishment of Kolapoor, in commutation of service. In the case of Sawunt Waree, again, a full pardon was accorded to Ana Sahab for his youthful indiscretion in taking part in the insurrection of 1844, and he was further recognised as heir-apparent to his father, the Sur Dessae. The death of the chief of Meeruj, towards the close of the preceding year, led to the recognition of his adopted son, during whose minority the management of the State is confided to the political agent for the southern Maratha country. A child, of only one year old, succeeded also to the chiefship of Moodhole, his father having been cut off by fever at an early age, and "while earnestly engaged in projects for the moral and material improvement of his estate." In Khandesh disturbances occurred, though not of a very serious nature. The Bheels to the west and south-west of Burwanee attacked a small detachment of the Malwa Bheel Corps, and burned their lines, killing three and wounding thirteen. For this outrage they were severely punished, their cattle being driven off, their families dispersed, and themselves reduced to such distress that they were glad to lay down their arms and sue for mercy. There was likewise a threatening movement on the part of the Naikras, a turbulent tribe dwelling on the Jhund hills, bordering the Rewa Kanta, but this was speedily suppressed through the judicious measures adopted by the political agent. The instigator of these troubles was a Brahmin, who gave himself out to be the agent of the Peishwa, and who was soon after arrested in Nimar. The wild, ferocious tribe of Bheels inhabiting the forest tract known as the Dangs, which lies at the foot of the Syhadree range, likewise indulged in a miniature civil war. The account of this disturbance, given in the official report of the year, is so concise, and at the same time so graphically suggestive of the state of society in those parts, that we need offer no apology for transferring it to our own columns:—

"On the death of Shreeput, the principal chief of the Dangs, and of his eldest son, who survived him but a short time, Devesing, the next heir, was opposed by his younger brother in his succession to the Gadee. They eventually agreed to resign their claims in favour of their uncle, Oodeysing, on whose death, his son, Keerulsing, succeeded. In the mean time (1854), Devesing grossly misconducted himself, and having wounded two men, he was apprehended and sentenced to two years' imprisonment in the Castle of Surat. Soon after he showed symptoms of insanity, and was in consequence removed to the Lunatic Asylum at Colaba. In April, 1860, Devesing effected his escape from the Asylum, and succeeded in reaching the Dangs. After his return he resumed his former lawless habits, and having been joined by some followers, they attacked and plundered several villages, which their inhabitants were compelled to abandon for security. On the commencement of these raids, Devesing sent a warning to Keerulsing, the chief of Garvee, to the effect that one of them must die, and he carried out his threat by seizing Keerulsing in his own house, and shortly after took part in his murder. On these occurrences being reported to Government, a party of the Bheel Corps was immediately despatched into the Dangs in pursuit of Devesing, and a reward was offered for his capture. Being closely pressed, he gave himself up to the magistrate of Khandesh, on the 5th February last, and several of his followers, including his brothers Dowlutsing and Roopder, were shortly afterwards captured. The magistrate of Khandesh is now about to bring the prisoners to trial, and measures are in progress for ensuring the future peace of the Dangs, and for otherwise improving the condition of this remote Bheel habitat."

A very different state of things presents itself in Guzerat. There we behold the Guicowar invested by the resident with the insignia of the Most Exalted Order of the Star of India, and engaged in carrying out most important measures of reform in the departments of police, revenue, and public works. The same principle that had been found to answer so well with the Scottish Highlanders, with the Sikhs and the Bheels, was tried by his Highness with equal success in the case of the long troublesome Wagheers of Okhamundel. Through the admirable tact of Major Johnstone, a corps of 300 Wagheers was raised and equipped, and paraded for his Highness's inspection while on his tour through Kattywar in company with Colonel Wallace. That province itself enjoyed perfect tranquillity, broken only by boundary disputes between the petty States into which it is divided. "Another remarkable feature of crime in this province is presented by the excesses committed by Bahir-wuttias, or outlaws, who, smarting under oppression, or real or imaginary wrongs, seek satisfaction for their grievances by recourse to a life of brigandage. The number of separate jurisdictions into which the province is split up affords great facilities for the commission of this offence, while the state of public feeling in the province operates very much as an encouragement to it." Scindiah's cession, by exchange, of the Punch Mahal districts on the common frontier between Guzerat and Malwa, consolidates the British border as regards Eastern Guzerat. The petition of the widows of the Rajah of Banda to adopt a son was rejected by the British Government as contrary to the customs of the Rajpoots in such cases, and the chiefship was conferred on a collateral relation of the late prince. A liberal provision, however, was made for his widows. The province of Kutch is described as having in a great measure recovered from the effects of the famine of 1860, and a new hospital and jail were being constructed by his Highness the Rao. Of Aden it is remarked in a general way that the Arab tribes in the neighbourhood had maintained peaceful relations with the British authorities, and that great efforts were being made for the suppression of the slave trade. Unusual interest, however, attaches to the affairs of Muscat, Zanzibar, and the Persian Gulf, as likely to affect our maritime and commercial interests, but these cannot fittingly be treated within the limits of the present article. A few words, however, may yet be devoted to Sind, though the present aspect of affairs in Khelat forms a disagreeable contrast to the favourable sketch given in this able report. The Murree and Bhoogtee tribes, we are told, were somewhat restless, and made two raids within the Punjab frontier, but spared the Sind territory. The progress of the Belooch colonies is stated to have been highly satisfactory. "As their means increase," writes the political superintendent, "they add to their landed property, which binds them to the place. The Jakraanes and Doombhees lately took up several thousand beegas of land on long leases. These they watered by canals ten or twelve miles in length, excavated last year by themselves and taken from the new canal, Muksaedawah, near Kusmare. This morning we passed through several miles of Jowaree cultivation, which six years ago was a thing almost unknown in these parts, and nearly the whole of it the work of those reclaimed marauders." There are clearly better teachers than the gibbet and the jail. His Highness Meer Ali Morad is mentioned in terms of praise, for having placed a certain number of native physicians under the instruction of Dr. Martin, the vaccinator in Sind. Finally, the envoy from the Ruler of Kokan to the Sultan of Turkey was hospitably entertained at Kurrachee at the public expense, and provided with a free passage to Bombay.—Bengal Hurkaru, May 13.

THE P. AND O. COMPANY AND A WEEKLY MAIL TO BOMBAY.

The question of a weekly mail between England and Bombay is now settled, and the contract for carrying it out has been, as might have been expected, given to the Peninsular and Oriental Company, the only Company at present organised with resources adequate to the service that will be required of it. Though it is said the P. and O. Company will commence the weekly mail service as soon as they have placed a requisite number of steamers at Bombay to enable them to conduct it with efficiency, we believe there is very little probability of a commencement being made before January next. The Peninsular and Oriental Company have been long looking forward to some such change as this, and are now vigorously preparing to meet it. We have been informed that there are two or three new steamers now on the way out, and that others will soon follow. The weekly mail service with Bombay will only be the inauguration of a series of changes of considerable importance in regard to the carrying of mails and the transit of passengers between India and England, of which Bombay must undoubtedly be the centre. A year ago, when Sir James Elphinstone's committee of members of the House of Commons was engaged in the inquiry as to the possibility of shortening the voyage from England to Madras, Bengal, and Burmah, by deepening the channel and removing the obstructions to the passage of large ships through Adam's Bridge, in the Paumben Pass, and thus save the time occupied in the circumnavigation of Ceylon, some interesting evidence was given by servants of the P. and O. Company, which showed at that time the Company was having an eye upon the changes which the development of the Indian railway system was daily bringing nearer. Mr. John Ritchie, the well-known and much respected agent of the P. and O. Company in Bombay for many years, was one of the witnesses examined, and the answers he gave to the questions of the committee possess interest on several points.

A great card of the mover for the committee referred to, was the possibility of the P. and O. Company being induced to make the Island of Rameseram a station from which their ships should diverge to China and Calcutta, and that it might also be made a coaling station; but the P. and O., as represented by Mr. Ritchie, would not entertain the idea at all. Mr. Thomas Baring, making the supposition that the P. and O. might change from Galle to Rameseram, asks Mr. Ritchie, "what would be the effect with respect to the China portion of the route?" Mr. Ritchie answers, "It would affect our commercial relations with China very considerably. It would not do for us to run our steamers for China through that channel. Why? Because in that trade we wish to communicate with Point de Galle. Could not that object be gained as well by small branch steamers? It would not suit us. You would have to set off the cost of the small branch steamers against the saving of the distance to Calcutta? Yes, but our most important communication as regards China, is with Bombay; the communication with Calcutta is not of great importance to us. Do you anticipate that when the railways are finished the passenger traffic from Calcutta via Point de Galle will be diminished? Yes. So that you look forward to the future service with Calcutta as one of minor importance? Comparatively so. We do not look forward to any large increase of our trade between Point de Galle and Calcutta. Looking broadly at the question, it seems to you that some port on the west of India will in future be the great point of communication? Yes." On Mr. Ritchie being asked the question whether the P. and O. Company would like to be at the expense of forming a new establishment at the Island of Rameseram?—he answered—"Seeing the altered state of circumstances, and the effect which the construction of the Indian railways may have upon our future prospects, I should be inclined to say that the company would not manifest a disposition to do very much until we saw how we were affected by the carrying out of the railway system. We have at present a very large establishment at Ceylon, and we certainly should not like to incur the expense of forming another under the present state of circumstances at the Island of Rameseram. When you speak of the railway communication, I suppose you are alluding to the opening of the railway at Beypoor; would that make a considerable difference in your arrangements? No doubt it may make a great difference. Do you think the line from Bombay to Allahabad would? The completion of the railway between Bombay and Calcutta with the line of railway to Madras would, I have no doubt, affect us very materially. And after your arrangements? Yes. So that under those circumstances you are not prepared to state whether it would be advantageous for you to use the communication through this channel of Paumben? The whole extent of the traffic from the East side of India would be materially lessened by the extension of the railway system, and, consequently, any interest which we may have in keeping up a communication with Calcutta will be proportionably diminished."

From the foregoing evidence it is pretty clear the P. and O. Company through the eye, so to speak, of their experienced servants, have been keeping a good look out as to what is going on, and arranging to adapt themselves to new circumstances as they arise. The arrangements connected with their dockyard accommodation, in Bombay now so enormously increased, shows they have been doing their best to prepare for the changes that are now close at hand. Nothing is said, however, regarding arrangements for the accommodation of the Madras and Calcutta passengers wishing to return to England by the railway from Madras to Beypoor. This route would unquestionably be a great convenience to persons travelling both from Calcutta and Madras, but they cannot avail themselves of it till branch steam communication is established between Beypoor and the Bombay and Ceylon routes, or by the Calcutta and Bombay steamers belonging to the P. and O. Company calling there. We fear, however, there is very little probability of this suggestion being carried out; the P. and O. Company will not risk the lives of passengers on their own valuable ships by calling at a place in a dangerous open roadstead in the south-west monsoon; and the same objection would apply to a branch line of smaller steamers. It seems an unfortunate blunder to have fixed on such a place as Beypoor as a terminus to the railway, a place that has really no advantage of any sort to commend it; unless the line is diverted to some other place near it and more suitable for harbour and landing-place, an important use of this railway will be utterly lost to the public. Regarding passengers from the east and north-east and north-west of India, we are not likely to have many of them for the Bombay steamers till Bombay is connected with Bengal by railway through the instrumentality of the G.I.P. and East India lines. When this is effected, the passenger traffic between England and most parts of India will undoubtedly centre in Bombay.—Bombay Gazette.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PARSEE MUNIFICENCE.—Another proof of the excessive liberality of the Parsee merchants in Bombay is furnished by the handsome offer recently made to Government by Mr. Cowajee Jehanghier. This public-spirited and charitable gentleman has desired to mark the occasion of the recent Royal marriage by a donation of a lakh of rupees towards the foundation of a university in Frere Town. When shall we see the rich natives of Bengal following examples such as these, and for which Bombay has already become famous?

MR. F. F. ARBUTHNOT is appointed Deputy Commissioner of Customs, Salt, and Opium, at the Presidency, from the date of Mr. Jenkins's retirement from the service.

MR. G. A. KIRKEDON has been recognised by Government as Vice-Consul at Bombay for the United States of America.

AN OFFICIAL BONFIRE.—The Kurrachee papers record the destruction by fire at Sakkur of the premises occupied by the Assistant Secretariat Officer, by which the whole of the Records of this department, extending over a period of seven years, were entirely destroyed. It is suspected that the fire was the work of an incendiary.

LIEUTENANT KENNEDY.—On January 19, 1861, we noticed the case of Lieutenant Kennedy, of the Bombay Cavalry, who about that time was dismissed the service without trial, for conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, in assuming, while on leave in Syria, the Mussulman garb and customs, and contracting a double marriage with a Mussulman woman. At that time, although we fully admitted Mr. Kennedy's misconduct, we contended that the Horse Guards had acted unjustly in dismissing him so summarily after his explanations on the subject had been received as satisfactory by the Government of Bombay. Such conduct was certainly harsh in the extreme, but we are glad to see, for the sake of such an important department as the Horse Guards, that Mr. Kennedy's subsequent conduct has amply justified the punishment meted out to him. A Bombay paper of recent date records that the ci-devant lieutenant of cavalry has been dismissed the Guicowar's service for a criminal offence of the worst nature. In that service he held a commission as captain, under the name of Ismail Beg, and his dismissal took place on the parade-ground under the usual circumstances of degradation—broken sword and torn commission. We may well sympathise with those who, for offences not disgraceful according to the Civil Code, are ruined for life; but with such a scoundrel as the above we have no pity. The British or any other service is well rid of him.—Times of India. "To the Editor of the Times of India :—Sir,—Referring to your issue of the 27th April, and to the paragraph of your correspondent from Baroda, relating to the circumstances of my expulsion from the service of his Highness the Guicowar, I beg the favour of your allowing me to add the following narrative of what occurred. It is true that a charge was preferred against me to the effect stated by your correspondent, but before any inquiry or court-martial was held upon the charge my expulsion was completed, notwithstanding my protest against such unfair conduct. Neither has any inquiry or court-martial been held since that event took place, so that I am a victim to the unlawful and unjust conduct of the authorities in his Highness the Guicowar's service. When this circumstance is brought to your notice and that of the public I am confident nothing more need be said in defence of an accusation which has seldom had its parallel for infamy, and which is utterly without foundation.—R. C. KENNEDY (alias Ismael Beg). Bombay, 12th May."

THE ROYAL AND LOYAL ADDRESSES.—the capital of India has done its best to atone for a delay which, like so many of the little faults of our present administration, is due to Simla. On Monday the leaders of Anglo Indian society, and the representatives of all classes, met in the Town-hall to adopt loyal addresses to her Majesty and the Prince and Princess of Wales. We do no discredit to the graceful words of the Lord Bishop, the earnestness of Sir Charles Trevelyan and the eloquence of Mr. Seton-Karr, when we say that the most remarkable feature of the occasion was the English of the addresses. Mr. Maine, who drew them up, has not only done justice to his own academic and literary reputation, but has set a much needed example to all, in the happy phrases, nervous style, and plain, forcible English of these documents. The ablest critic could not suggest the change of one word in compositions which are a model to those whose lot it is to draw up Queen's speeches, Viceregal addresses, and loyal memorials. Calcutta has resolved to present, as an offering to the Prince and Princess of Wales, the choicest specimens of Indian manufactures. The articles should be few and costly, such as Benares and Delhi produce.

Court Martial.

LIEUT. L. D'A. JACKSON, ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Head Quarters, Simla, May 2.—At a general court martial assembled at Mooltan, on Saturday, the 13th day of December, 1862, Lieutenant Lewis D'Aguilar Jackson, of the Royal Engineers, was arraigned on the following charge:—

Charge.—That he, the said Lewis D'Aguilar Jackson, on the 28th day of June, 1862, being an officer of her Majesty's Indian Army, serving at Dera Ismail Khan, a place in her Majesty's Indian territories, situated above one hundred and twenty English miles from the Presidencies of Fort William, Fort St. George, and Bombay respectively, did at Dera Ismail Khan aforesaid, cause the death of, and then and there murder, Munnoo Khan, by doing an act, that is to say, flogging the said Munnoo Khan, with the intention of causing bodily injury to the said Munnoo Khan, and which bodily injury so intended to be inflicted was sufficient, in the ordinary course of nature, to cause death; the said act being then and there done by the said Lewis D'Aguilar Jackson whilst he was not deprived of the power of self-control by any grave and sudden provocation; and not being done by him in the exercise of the right of private defence of person or property; and not being done by him as, or being, a public servant, or aiding a public servant, acting for the advancement of public justice; and the said death of the said Munnoo Khan not being caused without premeditation in a sudden fight, in the heat of passion, upon a sudden quarrel; and the said Munnoo Khan not suffering death, nor taking the risk of death, with his own consent.

Finding.—The Court are of opinion that the prisoner, Lieutenant Lewis D'Aguilar Jackson, of the Royal Engineers, is guilty of having caused the death of Munnoo Khan under circumstances constituting the offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and do accordingly acquit him of so much of the charge as alleges murder.

Sentence.—The Court sentence the prisoner, Lieutenant Lewis D'Aguilar Jackson, of the Royal Engineers, to be kept in penal servitude for the term of four years.

(Signed) W. BOYLE, Lieut.-colonel, 89th Foot, President.

Mooltan, 23rd December, 1862.

Revised Finding.—The Court are of opinion that the prisoner, Lieutenant Lewis D'Aguilar Jackson, of the Royal Engineers, is guilty of culpable homicide, but of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.

Revised Sentence.—The Court does now sentence the prisoner, Lieut. Lewis D'Aguilar Jackson, of the R.E., to be kept in penal servitude for the term of four years.

(Sd.) W. BOYLE, Lieut. Colonel, 89th Foot, President.

Mooltan, March 19, 1863.

Approved and Confirmed.

(Sd.) HUGH ROSE, General, Commander-in-Chief in India.

Simla, April 10, 1863.

H.E. the Governor-general approves of the sentence of penal servitude for four years passed upon the prisoner, Lieut. Lewis D'Aguilar Jackson, of the R.E., and of the said sentence being carried into execution.

FRIDAY, June 26, 1863.

THE LUCKNOW MURDERERS.

WHAT has been called the "sensation trial" at Lucknow has been brought to a close. The European community was naturally enough peculiarly interested in what seemed an endeavour to punish a couple of native scoundrels supposed to have been concerned during the great mutiny of 1857 in the murder of eight members of a single English family; the charge against them being brought by a surviving relative, Mr. George Lightle. The parties accused were Aga Ahmed Alee and Bundoo Beg, residents of Lucknow. The evidence, if it had been trustworthy, was strongly against them. Three witnesses, Lightle, Nadir Mirza, and Soobrattee, deposed distinctly to having seen Aga Amed Alee cut down Mrs. George Lightle, and Mr. Lightle avers that he himself saw the other prisoner, Bundoo Beg, kill a female of his family. But it appeared strange that Mr. Lightle should have postponed his charge for so long a period as six years. One witness swore that he had seen Amed Alee repeatedly in public, and that on one occasion he saw Ahmed Alee salaam to the prosecutor as he passed him, as if he were on familiar terms with him. There is, perhaps, little doubt that the two prisoners are very bad subjects, and, probably enough, were amongst the many Mahomedans who had imbrued their hands in Christian blood, but the legal evidence against them was very contradictory and unsatisfactory, and the prosecutor's own character required whitewashing. He is described by one of the witnesses as "one of a worthless gang." What may have been the motive of his prosecution of the prisoners is not even conjectured. The prisoners made no defence, apparently relying on the insufficiency of the evidence against them, and the Court acquitted them on the ground that the evidence was tainted throughout, and that from the character of the witnesses no reliance could be placed upon it. The natives will see in this decision, we hope, a proof that British judges can divest themselves of all hostile prejudices, and look at matters in what Lord Bacon calls a dry light undimmed by the vapours of the affections.

ORIENTAL MUNIFICENCE.

WHEN it was announced the other day in Parliament that the Government had bestowed on the aged and bereaved father of the late Sergeant-major Lilley a sergeant-major's pension, in consideration of the fact that "he lost son—one of the bravest and best-conducted men in the service, and whose name was at the Horse Guards as recommended by the military authorities in India for a commission, had been illegally maltreated and even literally persecuted to death by them—the proclamation, instead of silencing all complaint, was received with ironical cheers. We are afraid that the following Indian General Order of the 23rd of April last will be received by the public generally with similar marks of dissatisfaction. It was only a month or two ago that the Government had boasted that no services to the State were suffered to go unrewarded.

"As a special case, and for his long service, loyalty, and good conduct, during the defence of Lucknow, Ram Sukh, sweeper, No. 4 battery 16th brigade Royal Artillery, pronounced unfit for further service by an Annual Invaliding Committee, is, with the sanction of Government, granted a charitable pension of Rs. 2-8 per month, with effect from the 1st May last, and permitted to draw it from Lucknow circle."

In the "Narrative of an English Lady's Escape from Futtyghur in the Great Indian Mutiny of 1857," we read of the fidelity of a mehter or sweeper who risked his own life in preserving hers. She concludes her narrative with the following statement and remark:—"It would be as well to mention that the man was substantially rewarded by me the moment I possessed the means of rewarding him. I say substantially though not sufficiently, since what can be considered a sufficient reward for virtue such as he displayed, at a time when other natives were either holding aloof or were actively engaged in striving to exterminate our race." The lady does not tell us what she considered a substantial though not sufficient reward for her servant's fidelity; but we think we run little risk of error in guessing that it was vastly more liberal than that which the Government of India has bestowed upon poor Ram Sukh for his long service, and his loyalty and good conduct during the defence of Lucknow, and when he is invalided and worn out and pronounced incapable of further work. The British Government in India, to show its appreciation of the courage and fidelity of such of their native servants as are true to their salt, at the risk of their lives, in a special case, and for the encouragement of others to go and do likewise, has rewarded long service, and loyalty and good conduct in the midst of danger and temptation, with the princely pension of two rupees eight annas per mensem, which in English money is about five shillings a-month, or about twopence a-day! This glorious reward is pompously announced in the official Gazette. The good is not "done by stealth," but we suspect that the Government will have reason to "blush to find it fame."

THE CRAWLEY CASE.

ALMOST every paper in Great Britain has now said something about this unhappy business, and there is as yet but one opinion upon it. If the British in India were dissatisfied with the "clemency" of Lord Canning, the British at home are equally dissatisfied with the clemency of the Duke of Cambridge. Clemency is a truly Christian quality when properly directed; but no one but the Duke himself seems to think that it was rightly applied to such a man as Colonel Crawley, especially when his subordinate officer, poor Paymaster Smales, was so harshly dealt with. Authority leans to authority. In a despotic rule like that of the army, the weakest always goes to the wall. There is rarely a generous disposition amongst great commanders to protect the feeble against the strong. The usual British love of fairplay is extinguished by a stern regard for military discipline as the one thing needful. Throughout this sad affair all the high authorities seem to have favoured the officer in command of the 6th Dragoons. Paymaster Smales had little chance of justice. Poor Lilley had still less. Colonel Crawley fairly told his officers that if any of them opposed him "he would crush them." It was not an idle threat. He was conscious of the power his position gave him, and it is a shocking thing in the eyes of a free people that such power should be so easily abused. Fortunately, though military power is despotic, and to a certain extent necessarily so, the press is still more potent; and not the humblest soldier in the ranks of the British army can be grossly ill-treated with impunity while the press is free. The Fourth Estate is the truest, as it is the most powerful of our representative bodies. It has in this case compelled the authorities to consent that Colonel Crawley shall be put upon his trial in this country. There was a general feeling that his case had been prejudged by the authorities in India, and, in fact, his superior officers there are themselves implicated in the matter, and are indirectly, as it were, upon their trial also, for they must at least be called upon for some explanation of their conduct in sanctioning the long and illegal arrest of the late Sergeant-major Crawley and his two associates in confinement. It was announced in Parliament, amidst ironical cheers, that in consideration of the loss of their son, the aged parents of the maltreated Lilley should have a sergeant's pension from Government. This was an attempt—a very idle and paltry one—to appease the public indignation. It seems to have been quite an after-thought, and it turns out that the poor old bereaved and destitute father has not even yet received a penny of the paltry pension which was to compensate for the loss of a son literally persecuted to death.

Last evening the Crawley affair was again talked about in the House of Commons. Some members objected to the great expense of transferring an Indian military case to this country—others regarded the proceeding as an insult to the Indian Army. There is no doubt that the cost will be enormous, but then the country can afford to pay heavily for justice in a case like this; for it is not Colonel Crawley, or Paymaster Smales, or any other individual in the same, or in lower positions, that the nation is so concerned about. The question raised is, how far military despotism and official injustice may proceed without exemplary punishment. Every man in the army is personally interested in the settlement of this question. It would, of course, form a most inconvenient precedent, if an ordinary regimental quarrel in India were taken up at home at a vast expense; but the Crawley case is quite peculiar and exceptional. No insult is intended to the Indian Army by this proceeding, which is meant, on the contrary, to protect its interests. If any one is insulted it is not the Indian Army as a body, but Sir Hugh Rose and Sir William Mansfield individually, the first having supported Colonel Crawley, and defamed the memory of a brave soldier, and a sober and honourable man, and the second having sanctioned an illegal arrest. The case, therefore, is to be brought to this country for judgment, only because the highest military authorities in India are themselves implicated, and are, therefore, not in a position to regard the matter with an impartial judgment.

THE HIGH COURT OF BENGAL AND THE GOVERNMENT.

It is not the military amalgamation in India only that has not been arranged to the satisfaction of all parties—the judicial amalgamation also has been, like all human schemes, imperfectly conceived and incompletely executed. Already there is a collision between the High Court and the Bengal Government, because the limits of their respective authorities have not been properly defined. The strife between Beadon and Peacock is not, indeed, so virulent and dangerous as was that between Hastings and Impey, when an appeal to arms was only evaded by a handsome bribe; nor are Mr. Cecil Beadon and Sir Barnes Peacock such unscrupulous public men as Warren Hastings and Sir Elijah Impey. The living Governor and Judge are both thoroughly honourable men, and equally incapable of either giving or receiving bribes, and instead of fighting out their quarrel on the spot, have referred the point of dispute to the Secretary of State for India. It was, perhaps, generally understood that the amalgamation of the Queen's and Company's Courts had brought the former into something more like an immediate relation to the local political authorities than was ever recognised before—that they have lost, in fact, something of their former independence. The very uncertainty of their new position has made the High Courts peculiarly jealous of all interference, and they claim even a higher degree of power than they had previously enjoyed, resenting with indignation every act of the Government that bears the slightest semblance of an implied superiority. Thus, when the Judicial authorities at Bombay applied to the Government of Bengal for some information respecting a matter of routine or practice, and the Lieutenant-governor called upon the High Court of Bengal for the required information, he received a singularly sharp reply from the Chief Justice, Sir Barnes Peacock, which was not furnished until six months after it had been asked for. The Chief Justice instructed his Registrar to send in a response to the following effect:—

"1. That such an application showed the Lieutenant-governor to be incapable of appreciating the true value of the Judges' time, and the necessity of not diverting their attention from their legitimate duties!

"2. That the manner of making the reference, i.e., under a 'docket,' signed by a secretary, and inscribed 'Referred to the High Court for report,' was most objectionable, if not disrespectful.

"Lastly. That the Government of Bengal has neither authority nor right to call on the Judges of the High Court for their opinion, much less to order them to make a return! Providing they can do so without detriment to their own duties the Court would assist the Lieutenant-governor in matters of real difficulty, with respect to even which they reserved the right of refusing to assist should they deem it proper to so refuse."

This was certainly a rather offensive missive, and very provocative of an angry retort, but Mr. Beadon showed his good sense in avoiding an unseemly local dispute, and at once referred the matter to Sir Charles Wood. Mr. Peacock then did the same. In the interim the Lieutenant-governor of Bengal will communicate with the High Court only through the Governor-general of India in Council.

We alluded some numbers back to the case of a Mr. Eldred, who had been sent from the Mofussil to Calcutta to take his trial as a defaulter to the amount of several thousand rupees. All sorts of reports respecting the man's treatment by the authorities got into the papers, which, if true, would have shown that our Government in the East was anything but a paternal Government. The authorities, believing him to be mad, had placed him in the Hospital for the Insane, near Calcutta. Mr. Eldred was not so rigidly confined as to preclude all chance of escape. He got out of the hospital, and, consulting a solicitor, was advised to appeal to the High Court for a writ of habeas corpus. This was readily granted, and Sir Mordaunt Wells read the Government a severe lecture for the illegal confinement of Mr. Eldred, perhaps not a little exulting at the opportunity to exhibit the independence and power of the High Court.

The two leading papers of Calcutta, the Englishman and the Bengal Hurkaru, are in an antagonistic position on this case of Mr. Eldred, as on almost every other public question. The Englishman speaks of Mr. Eldred as a martyr, and makes a pathetic appeal to the public for subscriptions for his benefit. The Bengal Hurkaru represents him as at least a madman, if not something worse. The Government, to use a vulgar phrase, at once dropped the whole affair like a hot potato, and were glad, it seems, to give the man his liberty and have no more trouble with him, believing him to be insane, and being very desirous perhaps for the present to avoid all open collision with the High Court. The authorities may have been betrayed, in the case of Mr. Eldred, into some irregularities not strictly or formally legal, but we do not believe for a moment that they intended any cruelty or injustice. On the contrary, the man appears to have been really treated with the greatest tenderness, when it was supposed that he was the victim of the greatest brutality. That he was actually mad long before he went to Calcutta is evident, from the letter addressed by Dr. Plant, of Agra, to the editor of the Delhi Gazette. This letter we have now transferred to our own columns.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

THE ARMY IN INDIA.

Colonel SYKES asked the Secretary of State for India whether or not it was the fact that instructions had been issued by the home authorities to those in India with the view of preventing officers of the Indian (now Royal) Artillery from being withdrawn from their regiments for staff, civil, or other detached employment under the several local governments, for which, before being transferred under the authority of the Horse Guards, they were, by the regulations of the Indian service, equally eligible with officers of cavalry and infantry.

Sir C. WOOD said that no instructions had been sent out; but no doubt the tendency would be to employ fewer artillery officers in the manner indicated by the gallant member, because there were now numerous officers of cavalry and infantry who were unattached, whereas the services of the artillery officers were wanted with their corps.

Colonel SYKES: But there is no prohibition?

PRIZE-MONEY (INDIA).

Lord STANLEY asked the Secretary of State for India whether it was true that the private soldiers of the Malwa field force, which afterwards formed the first brigade of Sir Hugh Rose's division, would receive about £40 each from the Dhar prize-money, this booty having been granted exclusively to the actual captors; and whether it had also been proposed to allot to these troops a share of the Banda and Kirwee prize-money on the principle of constructive capture; and, if so, whether the law officers of the Crown had concurred in that suggestion.

Sir C. WOOD said that the Malwa field force would receive, as the noble lord had stated, about £40 per man. As to the second question, he had only to reply that the matter rested solely with the Treasury, and he was not aware whether it had yet come to any decision.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—JUNE 22.

COURT-MARTIAL UPON COLONEL CRAWLEY.

Mr. CONINGHAM asked the Under-Secretary of State for War whether the court-martial about to be held upon Colonel Crawley, of the 6th Dragoons, and the consequent inquiry into the court-martial at Mhow upon Paymaster Smales, would take place in this country; also, whether he would lay upon the table of the House the official report of the Judge-Advocate General in England on the proceedings of the court-martial at Mhow upon Paymaster Smales.

The Marquis of HARTINGTON said that Colonel Crawley was to be brought over to this country to be tried; but he could not give the papers asked for, as it was against precedent to do so.

Mr. CONINGHAM said he was requested to ask when the pensions proposed to be given to the father and mother of the late Sergeant Lilley would be ordered by the Government.

The Marquis of HARTINGTON said he was sorry for the delay which had taken place on this subject, but he hoped the matter would be carried out in two or three days.

Mr. BENTINCK asked if there was any precedent for a court-martial being ordered in this country for an occurrence which had taken place in connection with the army in India.

The Marquis of HARTINGTON could not say that there was any precedent for this proceeding; but the Judge-Advocate had deemed it right that the court-martial referred to should take place in this country.

RAILWAYS IN INDIA.

Mr. SMOLLETT asked the Secretary of State for India if application had been made, more particularly in reference to the Eastern of Bengal and Southern of Madras Railway schemes, for extension of those projects; if so, whether the applications had been complied with, and further guarantees of interest granted, payable from the revenues of British India.

Mr. BARING said that the India Council had offered to guarantee £652,000 for the completion of the Eastern of Bengal, and £850,000 for the Southern of Madras—£500,000 at 4½ per cent., and £350,000 on debentures at 4½ per cent.

RELIGIOUS ENDOWMENTS IN INDIA.

Mr. KINNAIRD asked the Under-Secretary for India what measures had been taken by the Government of India for giving effect to the Act passed by the Council of the Governor-general of India, "to enable the Government to divest itself of the management of religious endowments."

Mr. BARING said that the Act, which had been very recently passed, and which would be laid on the table, gave the local Government full power to act, and did not require any further measures on the part of the Government of India.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—JUNE 25.

CHINESE INDEMNITY.

Colonel SYKES asked the Secretary to the Treasury how it was intended to appropriate the balance of nearly half a million of dollars of the first Chinese indemnity remaining in the Treasury, and whether any rejected claims would be reconsidered.

Mr. PEEL said it had been decided more than twenty years ago that claims which had been adjudicated upon should not be reopened. He had been unable to discover what became of the balance of half a million dollars remaining in the Treasury in 1840, but he imagined it was applied towards the expenses of the war.

THE MALTA AND ALEXANDRIA CABLE.

Sir W. GALLWEY asked the Secretary to the Admiralty if directions had been sent to the Admiral in the Mediterranean to station a fast steamer between Benghazi and Alexandria, as the Malta and Alexandria cable had ceased working.

Lord C. PAGET said the day before yesterday a telegram was received from the Commander-in-Chief in the Mediterranean to the effect that the cable between Benghazi and Alexandria had been broken, and that application had been made to him to station a steamer between those two points. The answer was, that it would be highly inconvenient that a vessel should be appointed solely to carry telegrams between Alexandria and Benghazi, a distance of between three hundred and four hundred miles.

THE MHOW COURT-MARTIAL.—COLONEL CRAWLEY'S CASE.

Mr. CONINGHAM asked the Under-Secretary of State for War whether subsequently to the memorandum of the 18th of December a second memorandum or letter embodying the opinion of the Commander-in-Chief on the Mhow court-martial had not been issued; also, whether the proceedings alleged by Paymaster Smales to have taken place on his court-martial were submitted to the Judge-Advocate-General in England for his opinion, and whether that opinion was obtained before the paymaster was gazetted out of the service.

The Marquis of HARTINGTON said that no second memorandum or letter embodying the opinion of the Commander-in-Chief on the Mhow court-martial had been issued: no public memorandum, at least. With regard to the second part of the hon. member's question, its terms were so extremely vague and indefinite that he did not think he should be justified in giving any answer. The hon. member did not state to what "proceedings alleged by Paymaster Smales to have taken place" he referred.

Mr. CONINGHAM: The illegal proceedings.

The Marquis of HARTINGTON: The word "illegal" was not upon the paper. If the hon. gentleman wished to have a specific answer to his question he must be good enough to state what the illegal proceedings were to which he referred, and how these had been alleged by Paymaster Smales.

Mr. BENTINCK said that a few days ago he asked his noble friend whether there was any precedent for holding in this country a court-martial upon transactions which had occurred in India. His noble friend replied that he was not aware of the existence of any such precedent. He wished now to ask his noble friend whether during the interval which had since elapsed he had ascertained the existence of any such precedent; and whether, if no such precedent existed, the course it was proposed to adopt did not involve a reflection upon if not an insult to the officers of the Indian army?

The Marquis of HARTINGTON had not made any further inquiries, and was not, therefore, aware whether any precedent existed for the course taken by the Government. He could not state as a positive fact that no insult or reflection upon the officers of the Indian army was involved in that course; but personally he did not think that such was the case.

General Sir DE LACY EVANS wished to know whether the House was to infer from the answer of the noble marquis that there was some second communication or memorandum not precisely of a public character—(hear, hear).

The Marquis of HARTINGTON thought it very possible that the Commander-in-Chief had written privately to Sir Hugh Rose on the subject; but in such a communication there was nothing which was intended to be public, and of course it was utterly impossible that it could be laid on the table of the House.

Mr. CONINGHAM wished to understand whether the noble marquis declined to answer his question.

The Marquis of HARTINGTON said it would be necessary, before he could answer the question, for the hon. member to state distinctly what were the proceedings to which he referred, and in what document or paper their illegality was alleged.

Colonel NORTH held it to be utterly impossible to regard the course taken by the Government as one which did not involve a reflection upon the officers of the Indian army—"order, order"). To put himself in order he would conclude with a motion. It was a positive reflection upon officers serving in India to say, as was practically done by the Government, that a sufficient number could not be got together to give a fair verdict in the case of Colonel Crawley—(hear). It would be necessary to bring Sir H. Rose and other generals to this country if the court-martial took place here—"hear, hear," from Mr. Coningham). He did not object to that, but he must say the hon. member for Brighton had behaved in a very unfair way to that officer the other night—(cries of "order!") That hon. member produced and read to the House—

The SPEAKER said that the hon. and gallant member was out of order in referring to past debates.

Colonel NORTH said that there were two versions of the court-martial on Paymaster Smales—one published at Poonah, and the other from the Judge-Advocate's notes. Now, if the proceedings were to be published for the information of the House, they ought to be the proper official proceedings. He moved that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HEADLAM said that the original record of the court-martial was now in his office, and an official copy of that record would be laid before the House—(hear, hear).

Mr. CONINGHAM said that one of the illegalities complained of was that when Paymaster Smales was placed on his trial his witnesses were impounded, and he was prohibited from having access to them for the purpose of conducting his case.

Mr. DISRAELI: There is one point in this matter on which some information ought to be given to the House, and that is with regard to the expense that will be incurred—(hear). I do not know whether Colonel Crawley is to bear this expense, but in any case the cost of conducting the inquiry in this country will be very great. The Commander-in-Chief in India and other witnesses of that character must be brought over, and the presence of many other witnesses will probably be necessary. The House has at present no idea of the expense that may be incurred. I do not say that the trial will last as long as that of Warren Hastings, but it will last much longer than many hon. gentlemen anticipate. The matter is worthy of consideration, and the House requires some explanation on the subject from the Government.

Sir G. GREY: The Commander-in-Chief has directed that the inquiry shall take place in England. I apprehend that if any officer is ordered home by the military authorities from any part of the world he is considered to be on duty and receives his pay.

Sir DE L. EVANS differed altogether from the opinion that if this court-martial were held in England it would be necessary to summon the Commander-in-Chief from India. All that Sir H. Rose and General Farrell did was to make a written communication on the subject of the court-martial. The Commander-in-Chief was not one of the actors or witnesses, and he saw no valid reason for requiring his presence in this country. But the country would not be satisfied unless this trial took place in England—(cheers). Nor was any considerable expense, in his opinion, likely to be incurred. He humbly thought that the Government ought to commence the matter by ordering this regiment home—(cheers and counter cheers). The regiment was alleged to be in a bad state, its term of service in India was nearly expired, and the only consideration was the expense, which need not be very great.

Mr. BOUVERIE regretted that the present discussion had been raised in this incidental way. It would be much better if hon. members would give notice of such questions, so that the House might have an opportunity of expressing an opinion. He wished to know whether any communication had been addressed by the Commander-in-Chief to Sir Hugh Rose through the Adjutant-General, the purport of which was to qualify the memorandum that had been laid on the table of the House.

Mr. BENTINCK said that the question before the House was more military than civil. The hon. and gallant member (Sir De L. Evans) proposed that the regiment in question should be ordered home for the purpose of carrying on this court-martial—"No!" Then, for what other purpose? What would be the consequence? It would amount to a premium on misconduct—(hear). A regiment would only have to misconduct itself and give occasion for a court martial, and then it would expect to be ordered home. That would be a remarkable way of conducting the affairs of the army. The hon. and gallant member added that the people of this country would not be satisfied unless this court-martial were held in England. Now, as one of the representatives of the people, he would express his belief that all that the people of this country had a right to require, and all that they would ask was, that justice should be done on both sides. He thought it would be impossible for justice to be done if a tribunal were to try in this country proceedings that had occurred in India. It was obviously necessary that one hundred witnesses should be ordered home, and it would be impossible to do justice to both sides. It was quite impossible that a course which appeared to be entirely without precedent should be adopted without offering a strong reflection, if not a positive insult, on the officers of the Indian army—(hear).

Colonel DUNNE said the 8th regiment was the first to come home, but that only nine months would elapse between the return of the 8th regiment and the Inniskillings. As the expense had been alluded to, he would remark that if the Government would change the rota and order home the Inniskillings instead of the 8th, there would be no difficulty in regard to expense. At the same time this kind of interference with the discipline of the army was most prejudicial to the service—(hear, hear). He knew that some of the stories in regard to the conduct of Colonel Crawley had been extremely exaggerated. The House had been told that Sergeant-Major Lilley was confined to one room, and that a sentry was put in his room. He believed that the sergeant-major had a house of four rooms, and that the sentry would be placed in the verandah, because in India sentries could not be placed in the sun. He thought that Paymaster Smales had been most properly dismissed the service for writing a most insubordinate letter. It was not the practice, he was informed, for commanding officers of regiments to muster their regiments in India. An officer, now a member of that House, who had served in India, stated that it was not the custom to do so. A great deal had been said by the public press on this matter, but the House ought to yield, not to the public voice, but to the voice of justice.

Mr. HUNT asked whether it would be necessary to examine any native witnesses before the court-martial, and, if so, whether any law existed which obliged them to come to this country for such a purpose against their will.

The Marquis of HARTINGTON was unable, without notice, to answer the question just addressed to him. It was impossible to say what course the court-martial would take. If the right hon. gentleman (Mr. Bouverie) would put his notice on the paper, he would answer it another day. He could only repeat the answer which he had given on a previous day, that there was no public or official memorandum in existence on this subject except that which had been published. The hon. member for Brighton had said that one portion of the proceedings taken against Paymaster Smales was illegal. If, however, he was expected to answer questions of this kind, he must request hon. members to state distinctly on the notice paper what they wished to know. In his opinion it was extremely inconvenient to discuss topics in this manner. There were very few evenings lately on which the hon. member for Brighton had not placed some question on the paper, and considering that he had given notice of his intention to bring the subject before the House in Committee of Supply, and that the Government had promised to lay the proceedings of the court-martial on the table, he could not see what advantage could arise from these small incidental discussions—(hear, hear).

Mr. D. FORTESCUE said that what he had stated was that Sergeant-Major Lilley was at first confined to his own quarters, where he had several apartments; but that when he was ordered under confinement he was removed from his proper quarters to others, where he was confined to a single room. It was in the single room that the sentry was posted—(hear, hear).

Sir F. SMITH said it was very inconvenient to discuss matters of this kind pending the investigation that was to take place. He was one of those old officers who rejoiced very much at the course which the Government were going to take in bringing home the persons who were to give evidence—(hear, hear). The trial ought to take place in this country, otherwise public opinion would not be satisfied. Sometimes when out of England, and the army had not the advantage of the presence of the Judge-Advocate, everything was done in an irregular manner. But in this country, where that high officer was present, matters were properly and legally conducted. He was sure if his hon. and learned friend had been in India this case would not now have to be tried in England—(hear, hear). But it was because the persons who were to conduct such proceedings abroad, and who might be very excellent officers, were not acquainted with the law that these irregularities occurred. While he agreed with his hon. and gallant friend (Sir De Lacy Evans) that the trial ought to take place in England, he did not agree with him that the regiment ought to be brought home—(hear, hear).

Sir J. FERGUSON said he should be sorry the discussion should close without noticing a remark which fell from the hon. and gallant gentleman who had just sat down. If it were true that it would be impossible that a court-martial [Sir F. Smith.—I did not say impossible]—well, if it were probable that a court-martial could take place in India without a reasonable prospect of justice being done, might not public opinion call imperatively many times a year for the transfer from India to this country of persons whose evidence might be considered necessary?—(hear, hear). It might be that the habits and mode of life incidental to service in India might generate scandals and serious inconveniences which did not often occur in England; but the House would establish a very dangerous precedent if it tacitly assented to such a doctrine as that such cases should be brought home in order that public opinion might be brought to bear upon them—(hear, hear). But the House would do no such thing. That House and the country had confidence in the honour of courts-martial, and believed they would do justice.

Mr. CONINGHAM, in postponing a motion of which he had given notice with reference to this subject until after the evidence had been printed, took occasion to state, in reference to a remark made by an hon. and gallant friend of his, that Captain Smales's letter was of so insubordinate a character as to justify the verdict of the court-martial, that not only was that letter written under circumstances of great provocation, but that there were illegalities connected with the trial which justified him in asking for a reconsideration of the court-martial.

ROYAL MILITARY ACADEMY, WOOLWICH.

The half-yearly award of commissions and distribution of prizes to the gentlemen cadets of the Royal Military Academy by his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge (in accordance with previous examination by the Council of Military Education) took place on Wednesday afternoon in the spacious newly-erected gymnasium at the rear of the institution, in the presence of a large number of military officers, professors, and masters at the academy, and relatives and friends of the students.

The several classes of cadets assembled on the lawn fronting the building at half-past two o'clock, with the Royal Artillery band, and carried out a series of manual and platoon exercises in a highly creditable manner. At half past three o'clock a salute from a battery of artillery announced the arrival of his Royal Highness, who was accompanied by Lieut.-general Sir Harry D. Jones, G.C.B., Governor of the Staff College, Sandhurst; Lieut.-general Sir J. Yorke Scarlett, K.C.B., Adjutant-general; Lieut.-general Sir Richard Airey, K.C.B., Quartermaster-general; General Sir John F. Burgoyne, G.C.B., Inspector-general of Fortifications; General Sir George Pollock, K.C.B.; General Sir E. Lugard; Major-general J. Bloomfield, Inspector-general of Artillery; Col. C. Bingham, Deputy Adjutant-general; and Brevet-colonel E. Wodehouse, Assistant Adjutant-general of Royal Artillery.

His Royal Highness and staff were received at the main gate of the Royal Military Academy by the Deputy-governor, Major-general Sandham, R.E., Major-general Sir R. J. Dacres, K.C.B., Commandant of the Garrison; and his aide-de-camp, Major Reilly, C.B.; Colonel Yorke, R.E.; and numerous field officers. The Council of Military Education was represented by its vice-president, Major-general F. W. Hamilton, C.B.; Major-general Sir Fred. Abbott, C.B.; and Brevet-colonel T. Elwyn, R.A.

His Royal Highness and staff, having inspected the line of gentlemen cadets, front and rear, they marched past at slow and quick time, and subsequently carried out various evolutions. The cadets then marched in companies to the gymnasium, and formed into square near the table which contained the numerous prizes for presentation.

The proceedings commenced by Major-general Hamilton reading the following report of the Council of Military Education, addressed to the Duke of Cambridge:—

"The Council of Military Education have the honour to submit to his Royal Highness the Field-

Marshal Commanding-in-Chief the report of their examination of the gentlemen cadets of the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich. Of 44 cadets of the first class, 42 have been found qualified for commissions in the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers. Twelve commissions in the Royal Engineers have been announced; the 12 senior cadets on the list having been selected for that service, the remainder are recommended for commissions in the Royal Artillery.

"In the first class the examiner in fortifications, field-works, and bridges considers the result very satisfactory, every one of the cadets having obtained a higher credit than half the total number in the minimum course, and the nature of the answers shows that the subjects had been carefully studied. The examiner in chemistry reports the results to be on the whole satisfactory. The answers to the points are correct as far as they went, and seem to show that the cadets have in general acquired a fairly sound acquaintance with the elements of metallurgical chemistry, and one which will be useful to them hereafter.

"In the second class the progress in German and other subjects of study has been satisfactory.

"In the third class the progress has also been very satisfactory. In Hindustani the grammatical questions have been fairly answered, and considerable progress has been made in drawing.

"The council begs to report to your Royal Highness that the general result of the examination has been highly satisfactory."

Colonel Yorke, R.E., then read the following report from Major-General Sandham, Lieut.-Governor of the academy:—

"It is with much satisfaction that I am enabled to report to your Royal Highness that the whole of the first class who have just been under examination are fully qualified for commissions, as regards conduct, discipline, and proficiency in military exercises.

"The result of the examination of the junior classes shows unusual emulation and attention throughout the academy, and the general conduct of all has been particularly good.

"The discipline of the company has been upheld by the responsible and sub-divisional under officers and corporals in their respective divisions in a creditable manner. It is owing to their appreciation of their positions, together with the manner and bearing in which the duties are conducted, and the regulations are upheld by every officer, professor, and master connected with the establishment, in study and in the hours appropriated to military drills and exercises, or to recreation, that I am enabled to report so favourably to your Royal Highness."

The number of marks gained by each cadet for fortification, mathematics, and other branches of study, as certified by the Council of Military Education, were then read, and the following successful candidates were called to the front by his Royal Highness and informed that they would receive commissions as under (the numbers given being the marks gained by each):—

For the Royal Engineers.—1. Herbert P. Klocker, 23,878. 2. Henry P. Lee, 23,419. 3. Charles Birkbeck, 22,037. 4. John N. Manwaring, 22,240. 5. Killinworth R. Todd, 21,945. 6. Francis Q. Edmondes, 21,708. 7. William F. Spaight, 21,618. 8. William S. S. Bisset, 21,464. 9. William H. Coaker, 21,178. 10. Fleetwood T. Edwards, 21,152. 11. Herbert H. Whately, 20,920. 12. Harry C. Fox, 20,785.

For the Royal Artillery.—1. Sisson C. Pratt, 20,571. 2. William H. F. Sorrell, 20,416. 3. Francis Brinkley, 19,782. 4. Alexander W. Ferrier, 19,718. 5. Samuel S. Bomford, 19,580. 6. Francis L. Graves, 19,507. 7. Gilbert S. Parry, 19,402. 8. Francis W. J. Barker, 19,307. 9. Henry J. Rawle, 18,488. 10. Charles A. Empson, 18,461. 11. Edwin H. H. Cullen, 18,277. 12. George F. D. Sutton, 18,201. 13. William F. de H. Curtis, 18,056. 14. Harry E. Dolphin, 17,950. 15. Henry A. Graves, 17,922. 16. Robert L. Price, 17,886. 17. Henry A. Denny, 17,653. 18. Francis F. Ditmas, 17,342. 19. Harrison R. L. Morgan, 17,282. 20. Arthur A. Saunders, 17,117. 21. Richard Corbett, 17,062. 22. Arthur J. Pearson, 16,947. 23. Richard T. Roberts, 16,390. 24. John W. Buckle, 15,995. 25. William Buckle, 15,831. 26. William V. Gregory, 15,646. 27. Charles S. Graham, 15,160. 28. William Taylor, 14,600. 29. George Will, 13,401. 30. George Plunkett, 13,296.

His Royal Highness, who was surrounded by a brilliant staff of field officers, then proceeded to address the cadets in the following terms:—"It gives me the utmost pleasure to receive from the Council of Military Education, as well as from Major-general Sandham, the Lieutenant-governor of this important institution, such very satisfactory reports as those which have just been read. It is always painful to me to be compelled to make any remarks of an unpleasant nature, and I am, therefore, gratified to find that the new regulations, which I some time since introduced, with the sanction of the Council of Military Education and the War Department, have, on the whole, worked well, and given general satisfaction. I am also glad to hear that the responsible and sub-divisional under officers and corporals have well performed their duties, for without discipline such an institution could not be maintained; and whilst the state of things which now exists reflected credit upon the officers, it is also creditable to the students, as I have no doubt that had any breach of discipline taken place it would have been reported. I feel it my duty to mention one subject which a short time since came under my notice. A letter appeared in a weekly military newspaper, purporting to be written by a cadet at this institution, and which contained charges against one of the officers of the establishment. On reading this anonymous communication I instituted the most strict inquiry, and I ascertained that there was not a word of truth in the statements made from first to last. In my opinion, such anonymous statements are always more or less of a cowardly nature, and if the person who wrote that letter is now present, and within my hearing, I wish to tell him that I feel the utmost contempt for him, and if he is known to the gentlemen cadets present, I hope they will entertain towards him the same feeling of contempt as I do. I have done with that matter, and I now congratulate you that so many of your number have been found eligible for commissions in those eminently scientific corps—the Royal Engineers and Royal Artillery. I have before told you, and I must now repeat it, that when you become officers in her Majesty's service you must not consider that your education is completed. Remember that you live in an eminently scientific age, and endeavour to progress with the spirit of the age in which you live. Attend not only to your more purely military duties, but constantly study and try to attain scientific knowledge of your profession, and thus aim at advancement, and render yourselves valuable servants of the Crown.

His Royal Highness then proceeded to distribute the following prizes:—To Mr. Edmondes, for exemplary conduct, a regulation sword; Mr. Klocker, for exemplary conduct, the Pollock medal, founded by the inhabitants of Calcutta, and for topography, a pocket sextant; Mr. Spaight, for artillery, a double telescope, and for topography, a case of instruments; Mr. Kirkwood, for topography, a prismatic compass; Mr. Macdonald, for mathematics, a pocket sextant; Mr. Menzies, for mathematics, a pocket sextant, and for practical geometry, a prismatic compass; Mr. Chadwick, for practical geometry, a pocket compass; Mr. Georges, for landscape drawing, Penley's water colours; Mr. Burke, for fortifications, an aneroid barometer; Mr. Fox, for second fortifications, a pocket sextant; Mr. Bisset, for chemistry, a microscope; Mr. Annesley, for geology, and Mr. Lee, for natural philosophy, microscopes; Mr. Whately, for practical mechanics, a portable microscope; Mr. Mascall, for fortifications, ditto. Prizes consisting of valuable books were also awarded to Messrs. Vaughan, Jones, and Corbett.

His Royal Highness and staff subsequently witnessed a series of gymnastic exercises by the gentlemen cadets, and left the institution at half-past five o'clock, the cadets firing a Royal salute from the guns of their miniature battery.

His Royal Highness and staff then proceeded to the mess-room of the Royal Artillery Barracks, where a banquet was provided—covers being laid for 100 guests, among whom, in addition to the officers named, were—Earl de Grey and Ripon, Secretary for War; his Grace the Duke of Somerset, the Rev. J. Gleig, Chaplain general of the Forces; Baron Von Döbenach, Sir E. Filmer, M.P., Mr. Alderman Salomons, M.P., and Mr. W. Angerstein, M.P.

MISCELLANEOUS.

DEATH OF THE HON. SIR GEORGE ELLIOT, K.C.B.—After a protracted illness, Admiral the Hon. Sir George Elliot, K.C.B., died on Wednesday morning, shortly after nine o'clock, at his residence at Prince's terrace, Kensington. The gallant officer, who was the second son of Gilbert, 12th Earl of Minto, by Anne Maria, eldest daughter of Sir George Amyand, and consequently brother of the late and uncle of the present Earl of Minto, was born the 12th August, 1784, and married in May, 1810, Cecilia, youngest daughter of Mr. James Ness, of Osgodrie, Yorkshire, by whom, who died in May, 1848, he had a numerous family, his eldest son, George, having obtained his flag rank in the navy, and among his married daughters are the Countess of Northesk, Lady W. Compton, and Mrs. Drummond, wife of Capt. the Hon. James R. Drummond, C.B., one of the Lords of the Admiralty. The Admiral entered the navy in 1794, as a first-class volunteer, on board the St. George, 98, bearing the flag of Admiral Sir Hyde Parker, and was present in Lord Hotham's actions in March and July, 1795, and was on board the Gotha when that ship led the British fleet into action, on the 1st of August, 1798. For some time he was on board the San Josef and the St. George, flagships of Lord Nelson and Sir Charles M. Pole, in the latter of which, under the gallant Capt. Masterman Hardy, he was present at the action off Copenhagen, April, 1801. After various services afloat he, according to O'Byrne, in October, 1808, captured La Jena, French corvette, of eighteen guns and 150 men, after a running action of nearly an hour. He also, when in command of the Aurora, in an action of three hours with some Spanish gunboats near Tarifa, captured three of the enemy's ships. At the reduction of Java he was recommended to the notice of the Admiralty for the ability he displayed in superintending the landing of the troops. After severely chastising the pirates of Sambas, in Borneo, and afterwards assisting Colonel Macgregor in reinstating the Sultan of Palambang, he returned home, and was for some time unemployed, his next appointment being, in 1827, to the Victory guardship, at Portsmouth. In September, 1837, the year he obtained his flag rank, he was appointed Commander-in-Chief at the Cape of Good Hope; and in February, 1840, assumed the command of the Fleet in China, where, in the additional capacity of joint plenipotentiary with Capt. Charles Elliot, R.N., he superintended the earlier operations of the war from July to November. He returned home in 1841 in ill health, from the combined effects of the climate and over-exertion in the discharge of the onerous duties attached to his command. Admiral Elliot filled the office of First Secretary to the Admiralty from December, 1834, until April, 1835, and was subsequently, until his appointment to the command at the Cape, a Junior Lord of the Admiralty. In 1830 he was appointed a naval aide-de-camp to King William IV.; in September, 1831, nominated a Companion of the Order of the Bath, and made a Knight Commander of the Order in November last. His commissions bore date as follows:—Lieutenant, 12th August, 1800; commander, 14th April, 1802; captain, 2nd January, 1804; rear admiral, 10th January, 1837; vice-admiral, 13th May, 1847; and admiral, 5th May, 1853.

THE WAR IN PERSIA.—A despatch has arrived at the Foreign Office announcing that intelligence had been received on the 11th inst. by her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Persia of the capture of the city of Herat by Dost Mahomed Khan.

REPORTED DEATH OF DOST MAHOMED KHAN.—VIENNA, June 22.—The Oesterreichische Zeitung of to-day publishes intelligence from the East, stating that Dost Mahomed Khan has died before Herat.

APPOINTMENT.—(India Office, June 22.)—The Queen has been pleased to appoint Mr. Michael Robert Westropp, barrister-at-law, to be a Judge of the High Court at Bombay.

EAST INDIA FINANCE.—The finance and revenue accounts of the Government of India for the year 1861-62, and an estimate of revenue, expenditure, and cash balances for 1862-63 have just been issued. The gross income of the revenue of India in the year ending April 30, 1862, was £43,929,472. The expenditure was £43,880,100, there being an excess of expenditure over income of £50,628. The total cash balance in India and at home on the 30th of April, 1862, was £23,021,990. The estimated income of the revenue of India in the year ending April 30, 1863, is £45,105,700. The expenditure is estimated at £43,825,104. There is thus an excess of income over expenditure to the amount of £1,280,596.

and relieve Trustees.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that all creditors upon or against the Estate of the said PETER JOHN MACDONALD (who died on or about the 26th day of August, 1863, at sea, and Administration to whose Estate and Effects was granted by Her Majesty's Court of Probate Principal Registry on the 6th day of February, 1863, to HENRY FREDERICK DOWNES, of Warwick-street, Charing-cross, in the County of Middlesex), are to send the particulars of such claims or demands to the said Administrator on or before the 31st day of December next, at the expiration of which time the said administrator will proceed to distribute the assets of the said Intestate among the parties entitled thereto, having regard only to the claims of which he shall then have had notice, and that the said Henry Frederick Downes will not be liable for the assets, or any part thereof, so distributed to any person of whose claim he shall not then have had notice.

Dated this tenth day of June, 1863.

MR. EPHRAIM MOSELY'S IMPROVE-

MENT IN THE CONSTRUCTION OF ARTIFICIAL
TEETH, GUMS, and PALATES, on an INDIA-RUBBER

BASE, are secured by Letters Patent, dated December, 1862, whereby the continual outlay of new teeth is avoided, alterations from the absorption of the gums, or any other cause, being easily remedied, and the first outlay no greater than for ordinary kinds. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted as under:—It consists of one continuous piece of Prepared India-rubber. The Artificial Teeth present an uniformly even surface to the action of the tongue, preventing lodgment of food and all secretions, so much complained of in the present system. No gold or any other metal being required, all springs, wires, and fastenings are wholly unnecessary; sharp edges are avoided, a greatly increased freedom of suction is supplied, a natural elasticity hitherto wholly unattainable, and a fit perfected with the most unerring accuracy, are secured; while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums. The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the prepared india-rubber; and, as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may be retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being at the same time provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation.

MESSRS. WM. H. ALLEN AND CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

AN INQUIRY into the THEORIES of HISTORY.—CHANCE, LAW, WILL, with Special Reference to the Principles of the Positive Philosophy. 8vo. cloth, 18s.

"This is both an able and an interesting book; for the writer, while an accurate and in some respects an original thinker, has also the command of a clear and animated style. The general scope of the book is the refutation of that naked positivism of which M. Comte is the apostle. . . . Of the whole work we can confidently say that it is one to be read by every man interested in these questions. It is a weighty treatise, and an important contribution to philosophy."—The Press, August 16, 1862.

"Written to combat certain opinions which have lately been gaining ground with some classes of thinkers, this treatise is well-timed. With no more boldness than is proper, the author claims that the views of wise men in former ages shall not be disregarded without good reason, and that nothing new and improved shall be accepted simply because of its impudence. His own language throughout is moderate and logical. A Conservative on principle, it is a part of his conservative belief in the steady progress of mankind to seek for the development of new thoughts in every age of human history, and ready to accept all that bears the stamp of truth. In a book full of argument, and occupying just that border-land of metaphysics which is harder to tread than the defined circle of metaphysics itself, it would be easy to discover discrepancies of thought and contradictions of terms; but the faults are few, and the merits many."—Examiner, Aug. 16, 1862.

A SHORT TRIP in HUNGARY and TRANSYLVANIA in the SPRING of 1862. By Professor D. T. ANSTED. Post 8vo., cloth, 8s. 6d.

"Professor Ansted's descriptions are written with a neatness attesting the accuracy of a scientific observer's eyes. His volume is one both of value and entertainment: a book calculated to turn the thoughts of tourists down the Danube."—Athenaeum, Aug. 16, 1862.

"Many a tourist this autumn will have cause to thank Professor Ansted for introducing them to a new and comparatively unknown country. . . . It would be difficult to find a more agreeable companion for a tour than the author of this interesting volume."—The Press, Aug. 9, 1862.

THE SCIENCE OF HOME LIFE.

By ALBERT J. BERNAYS, Professor of Chemistry and Natural Philosophy, and of Practical Chemistry at St. Thomas's Hospital Medical and Surgical College (late Lecturer on Chemistry and Practical Chemistry at St. Mary's Hospital), &c., &c. Illustrated by several cuts. Post 8vo., cloth, 6s.

MEMORABLE EVENTS OF MODERN HISTORY. By J. G. EDGAR. Author of the "Boys'hood of Great Men," &c., &c. With Illustrations. Post 8vo., cloth, 6s. 6d.

"A practical writer, with a high sense of his obligations as an instructor of children. Mr. J. G. Edgar never makes a contribution to juvenile literature that does not deserve a certain measure of commendation. We can conscientiously recommend it ('Memorable Events') as a work at the same time entertaining and useful."—Athenaeum, March 6, 1862.

"Mr. Edgar's style is clear, vigorous, simple, and unaffected, and from the first page to the last the reader is instinctively conscious of standing in the presence of a gentleman and a scholar. Though writing for the benefit of the rising generation Mr. Edgar possesses the enviable talent of attracting at the same time the attention of young men and grey-beards, and of so describing events as to suggest many a topic for grave reflection. His last ('Memorable Events') is certainly not his least work, and not only confirms but enhances his previous reputation as an earnest, agreeable, high-minded, and reliable chronicler of human achievements and human follies and failures."—Spectator.

"A most acceptable present for the youth of both sexes."—Observer.

THE FORESTS and GARDENS of SOUTH INDIA. By HUGH CLYDE, M.D., F.L.S., Conservator of Forests, Madras Presidency. Post 8vo., with Illustrations, price 12s.

"Full of valuable information and thoroughly rehearsed in all its statements."—Daily News.

THE HISTORY of CHESS: from the Time of the Early Invention of the Game in India till the Period of its Establishment in Western and Central Europe. By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D., 8vo., cloth, 15s.

"This volume will be a welcome addition to the library of every lover of the noble game of chess. Our author makes a stout fight for the Hindus as the inventors of the game, and adduces many cogent proofs in support of his opinion. He shows how the game is played in other countries, how it has been modified both in the names of the pieces and the names of the game by the peculiarities of the country or the national temperament of the inhabitants; and then traces the steps by which it has arrived at its present place of honour in civilised and intellectual Europe. The book is, therefore, full of curious lore that lean on other and higher subjects than chess-playing, for it involves dissertations on ethnology, comparative zoology, the dispersion and settlement of nations, and the manners and customs of different countries, to a degree that would not be at all anticipated by a person who contented himself by reading the title-page. All this information is given, not in any dry, repulsive, or even technical style, but easily, clearly, and in an animated manner—the style that would naturally be adopted by a gentleman and man of the world."—Herald.

SIN: its Causes and Consequences. An Attempt to Investigate the Origin, Nature, Extent, and Results of Moral Evil. A Series of Lent Lectures. By the Rev. HENRY CHRISTMAS, M.A., F.R.S. Post 8vo., cloth, 6s. 6d.

"These lectures are learned, eloquent, and earnest, and though they approach the 'limits of religious thought,' they do not transgress those limits; and they present the reader with a comprehensive review, based upon revelation, of the nature, extent, and consequences of moral evil or sin, both in this world and in the world to come."—Civil Service Gazette.

A COURSE OF ELEMENTARY MATHEMATICS, for the Use of Candidates for Admission into either of the Military Colleges; of Applicants for Appointments in the Home or Indian Civil Service; and of Mathematical Students generally. 2nd Edition. In one closely printed 8vo. volume. Pp. 648. Price 12s.

"In the work before us he has digested a complete Elementary Course by aid of his long experience as a teacher and a writer; and he has produced a very useful book. . . . Mr. Young has not allowed his own tastes to rule the distribution, but has adjusted his parts with the skill of a veteran."—Athenaeum, March 9, 1861.

"Mr. Young is well-known as the author of undoubtedly the best treatise on the 'Theory of Equations' which is to be found in our language—a treatise distinguished by originality of thought, great learning, and admirable perspicuity. Nor are these qualities wanting in the work which we are reviewing. . . . Considering the difficulty of the task which Mr. Young has undertaken to discharge, and the extent of useful knowledge he has succeeded in imparting accurately and lucidly in so small a compass, we can without hesitation commend this work to the public as by far the best elementary course of mathematics in our language."—The London Review, April 6, 1861.

THE RUSSIANS AT HOME: Unpolitical Sketches, showing what Newspapers they read; what Theatres they frequent; and how they Eat, Drink, and Enjoy themselves; with other matter relating chiefly to Literature, Music, and to Places of Historical and Religious Interest in and about Moscow. By SUTHERLAND EDWARDS, Esq. 2nd Edition, with Illustrations. Price 10s. 6d.

"It is a book that we can sincerely recommend, not only to those who are desirous of abundant and reliable information respecting the social economy of the Russian people, but to those who seek an entertaining volume, that may be perused in any part with both profit and amusement."—Edinburgh Evening Courant.

"This is not only one of the most amusing books that we have read for a long time, but also the best and most reliable account of Russian life and manners which has hitherto been given to the public."—Spectator.

"The tone is so genial, the descriptions are so vigorously touched, and the author's perfect acquaintance with his subject is so marked throughout, that his sketches are sure to delight any one into whose hands they may fall."—Literary Gazette.

HISTORY OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE in INDIA, by EDWARD THORNTON, Esq., containing a copious Glossary of Indian Terms, and a complete chronological Index of Events. The whole in one closely-printed 8vo. volume, price 12s.

Students who have to pass an examination on the History of India will find Mr. Thornton's the best and cheapest volume to consult, for whilst it is a complete and comprehensive History, the style is lively and interesting, a great contrast with all other Histories of India.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of MISS CORNELIA KNIGHT, Lady Companion to the Princess

Charlotte of Wales, with Extracts from her Journals and Anecdote Books. Fourth Edition, 2 vols., 8vo., cloth, £1. 6s.

"Why we should turn to these volumes as among the most interesting of the recent season, will be sufficiently evident as we indicate their contents."—Times.

"Of the popularity of these volumes, on account of their historical as well as gossiping acents, there can be no doubt whatever."—Athenaeum.

THE HISTORY of the OPERA, from

MONTEBERD to DONIZETTI. By SUTHERLAND EDWARDS. Second edition, 2 vols., 8vo., cloth, price £1. 1s.

"Completely master of his subject, and possessing a ready and pleasing pen, Mr. Edwards in these volumes gives us an exceedingly interesting history of operatic performances."—Herald.

"It is one of those treasures of amusing anecdote that may be taken up and laid down at a minute's notice."—Times.

THE REPUBLIC of FOOLS: being the History of the State and People of Abderia in Thrace. Translated from the German of C. M. von Wieland. By the Rev. H. CHRISTMAS. 2 vols., post 8vo., cloth, 18s.

"As a prose satire, 'The History of the Abderites' yields only in breadth of humour, and pungency of wit, to Dean Swift's immortal travels of Captain Lemuel Gulliver, and of works of that class we know of none in any language that can compare with either of the two."—Observer.

"Here is enjoyment for many a Christmas to come, for many thousands of English boys, and many thousands of English men and women. Unfortunately for the world Pisistratus Caxton departed this life without having made any contribution towards the great history of human folly, save, indeed, by the records of his own. Mr. Christmas has given us something even better in his translation of Wieland's Abderites; and in the simplest, most racy, and vernacular English, has enriched our literature with another character of the family dear to mankind, of the Quixotes, Gullivers, and other human foils of human self-love and vanity. If the addition to our shelves of a book to delight the young and instruct the old overflowing with wit, fun, drollery, inexpressible, wisdom depth, and knowledge is an achievement deserving of national thanks, we undertake to convey our share to Mr. Christmas, fearing only lest we should not have thanked him sufficiently."—London Review.

THE POLISH CAPTIVITY:

An Account of the present Position and Prospects of the Poles in the Kingdom of Poland, and in the Polish Provinces of Austria, Prussia, and Russia.

By H. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS, Author of "Russians at Home."

"A portion of this book on Poland by Mr. Sutherland Edwards has already appeared in our columns, though apparently such a small portion that it is substantially a new as well as a highly opportune production."—The Times, April 2, 1863.

"Mr. Sutherland Edwards not only understands his subject, but what is far more important and uncommon, his readers. He tells his audience precisely the facts which they are desirous to know. The 'Polish Captivity' is full of light but suggestive sketches, pièces justificatives of historic value, national songs and stories, descriptions of Polish towns, Polish nobilities, and Polish women, and, besides, a book on an English lady might read with twice the ease of Mr. Trulove's latest novel."—Spectator, March 28, 1863.

"The book in which Mr. Sutherland Edwards has depicted the 'Polish Captivity' would have been valuable at any time, but the opportuneness of its arrival so enhances its merits, that it is certain to command a greater than ordinary success. It is a subject which few writers are competent to deal with, but Mr. Edwards possesses special qualifications for the task. Personal experience has made him well acquainted with Poland and the Poles; the interest he takes in their fortunes has led him to study the question of their wrongs with zeal and assiduity, and his acquaintance with Slavonic languages enables him to make use of stores of information which are unobtainable to the ordinary student. Consequently, he is entitled to speak with authority, and his opinions on the condition, feelings, and prospects of the various nations which he describes deserve a very different hearing from that which we should give to the crude theories formed by a careless traveller passing lightly through an unfamiliar land."—London Review, March 28, 1863.

"Mr. Sutherland Edwards visited Poland in the intervals between the Warsaw massacre and the breaking out of the insurrection. What he saw he has described simply, but forcibly. Few English writers are so likely as he to form a correct judgment on any matter connected with Russia or Poland. His acquaintance with each of these countries, its people, its language, and its literature, gives him advantages which few other travellers possess. In wandering with him about the streets of Warsaw, we feel that we are in the hands of a trustworthy guide, one who can tell us what the people are chattering about, and who can explain the written mysteries which, under the veil of an unknown tongue, elude our baffled eyes. Mr. Edwards's book will be read with deep interest. It is well written, and the narratives are well constructed."—Athenaeum, March 31, 1863.

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!!—C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times, C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Mordan, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches, with prices, free by post. 33, Cannon-street West, St. Paul's, London; and opposite the Angel, Islington.

MR. HOWARD, Surgeon-Dentist, 52, Fleet-street, has introduced an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed without springs, wires, or ligatures. They so perfectly resemble the natural teeth as not to be distinguished from the originals by the closest observer. They will never change colour or decay, and will be found superior to any teeth ever before used. This method does not require the extraction of roots, or any painful operation, will support and preserve teeth that are loose, and is guaranteed to restore articulation and mastication. Decayed teeth stopped, and rendered sound and useful in mastication. 52, Fleet-street. At home from Ten till Five.

TENDER and DECAYED TEETH STOPPED with ANODYNE CEMENT, which instantly allays the most violent pain, and fills up cavities, however large, and answers where every other kind of stopping has failed. Prepared only by Mr. ALFRED JONES, Surgeon-Dentist to their late R.H. the Prince's Augusta and Duchess of Gloucester, the late Louis Philippe, and the ex-Royal Family of France. 61, Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square. At home from 11 till 4. No connection with any person practising in the same profession.

TEETH and PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—Messrs. LEWIN MOSELEY and SONS, 30, Berners-street, Oxford-street, W., direct attention to their GUM-COLOURED ENAMELED BASE FOR ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, &c., specially commended at the International Exhibition—Class X.II., No. 3556. Single Teeth, from 5s.; Sets, from Five Guineas. For the successful result and efficacy of their system, vide "Lancet."

SARSAPARILLA.

WILKINSON'S (late BRIDGE'S) ESSENCE OF FLUID EXTRACT OF RED JAMAICA SARSAPARILLA is appreciated for its Purity, and marked superiority, daily prescribed by the Faculty for Impurities of the Blood, Affections of the Liver, Constitutional Debility, Attenuation of Body, as an Alternative Medicine at the Changes of the Seasons, and for freeing the system from the effects of Mercury.

In India and the Colonies it is extensively used to prevent taking complaints incident to Tropical Climates, and as a renovator of the system after Sickness invaluable.

A superior preparation, that may always be relied on.—Sir Ashtley Cooper.

"We are in every respect satisfied with it."—Lancet. "We recommend your Sarsaparilla as the best."—Medical Review.

"Latterly, in consequence of much debility, &c., subsequent to Cholera, I have freely used 'Bridge's Sarsaparilla,' mixed with complete benefit and success."—J. Poett, F.R.C.S.

Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter pints. One pint is equal to eight pints of the ordinary preparations.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The public are cautioned against cheap preparations of Sarsaparilla, which, instead of being what they profess, are nothing but a decoction of common herbs, sweetened with molasses, and flavoured with American Winter Green. The genuine has "Thos. Wilkinson (late Bridge and Co.), 270, Regent-street, London," engraved on each bottle.

AGREEABLE SEIDLITZ POWDER in one bottle, protected by a case with measure and spoon included. This preparation is highly recommended, not only as a Mild Aperient, but to allay Fever, Thirst, &c.

AROMATIC TINCTURE OF QUINIODINE for the prevention of Fever, intermittent or Remittent Ague, and other effects of Malaria. No person exposed to the influence of or predisposing cause of Fevers should be without it, for if taken in small doses daily the system will become so thoroughly impregnated with its principles as to be rendered proof against all attacks of Contagion or Malaria. Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter-pints.

The above articles prepared only by Thos. Wilkinson (late Wilkinson, Bridge, & Co.), 270, Regent-street, London, W.

IMPORTANT TO OFFICERS.—Have all your BOTTLED ALES, WINES, &c., PACKED IN SEYMOUR'S REFRIGERANT STRAW ENVELOPES, which entirely prevent Heating, Fermentation, and Breakage; will use repeatedly as Wine Coolers, prevent all leek on board ship or in quarters, and save 20 per cent. in space and freight.

Supplied by all Wine Merchants at 9d. per dozen, and wholesale by THOMAS WHITEHEAD, 37, Eastcheap, London, E.C.

THE OCCHIOMBRA, or TRANSPARENT VENTILATING EYE and SUN SHADE, excludes wind and dust, and modifies the light, keeping the eye perfectly cool; it can be worn over spectacles, and is easily removed when required.

Patentee, J. CALEKIN, Sole Agent. Wholesale and Retail, JOHN WILKES and SON, 62, Strand, London. Price, in case, 5s. 6d.; post free, 6s. 6d.

KEEP AWAY THE DOCTOR is an old saying. People follow the advice, and ensure a good state of health by the simple and cheap process of taking PARR'S LIFE PILLS, which may be used with confidence in all cases of sick headache, indigestion, bilious liver, and stomach complaints, habitual coldness, nervous affections, &c. In most cases the sensation of illness vanishes after two or three pills have been taken. May be obtained of any medicine vendor, in boxes, 1s. 1d., 2s. 6d., and in family packets 11s. each.

RUPTURES.—BY ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

WHITE'S MOC-MAIN LEVER TRUSS is allowed by upwards of two hundred medical gentlemen to be the most effective invention in the curative treatment of HERNIA. The use of a steel spring, so hurtful in its effects, is here avoided, a soft bandage being worn round the body, while the requisite retaining power is supplied by the MOC-MAIN PAD and PATENT LEVER, fitting with so much ease and closeness that it cannot be detected, and may be worn during sleep. A descriptive circular may be had, and the TRUSS (which cannot fail to fit), forwarded by post, on the circumference of the body two inches below the hips being sent to the manufacturer.

Mr. JOHN WHITE, 228, Piccadilly, London. Price of a Single Truss—16s., 31s., 26s. 6d., and 31s. 6d.

Postage 1s. Double Truss—31s. 6d., 42s., and 52s. 6d. Postage 1s. 6d.

An Umbilical Truss—12s., and 52s. 6d. Postage 1s. 10d.

Post-office Orders to be made payable to JOHN WHITE, Post-office, Piccadilly.

NEW PATENT.

ELASTIC STOCKINGS, KNEE CAPS, &c., &c.—VARICOSE VEINS, and all cases of WEAKNESS and SWELLING of the LEGS, SPRAINS, &c.—They are porous, light in texture, and inexpensive, and are drawn on like an ordinary stocking. Price 4s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 10s., and 20s. each. Postage 6d. JOHN WHITE, Manufacturer, 228, Piccadilly, London.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—INFECTIOUS MALADIES.—We are all aware that at certain times disease runs through the people like the plague of old, and all should likewise know that Holloway's Pills can check such spreading calamity. This purifying medicine expels from the blood and system all obnoxious matters which breed both contagious and infectious maladies: it institutes a radically curative rather than a palliative treatment. Holloway's Pills should be taken without one moment's needless delay when disordered stomach, headache, restlessness, or general feverishness betoken some derangement or debility of the frame. The true art of conquering disease lies in obeying nature, and surely quietly getting rid of lurking poisons and overcoming their pernicious effects is the safest course for the physician.
